ROHATYN SAYS CITY STRETCH OUT PAYMENT OF BONDS

1 Sees Tax Reduction
York if Debt-Service

By R. WEISMAN
Rohatyn, chairman of the Finance Corporation, today said that New York City would stretch out the payment on more than $1 billion of long-term bonds as a way to save for drastic new services next year.

before the New York City Finance Corporation, Mr. Rohatyn said that the program, requiring Federal approval, would bring about what he called "complete refinancing" of the bonds issued by both the City and the State.

He said, the program would delay the retirement of the bonds over a period of 20 to 25 years. Such a plan would then stretch out the payments of $200 million a year to about $100 million a year to achieve debt service costs to be met next year, as mandated by the State.

Mr. Rohatyn said that the program would also lead to a reduction of about 20 percent in real estate taxes which are pegged to the debt service, Mr. Rohatyn said.

Opponent of Chilean Junta Slain In Washington by Bomb in His Auto

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—Orlando Letelier, who was foreign minister in the Chilean government of President Salvador Allende Gossens, was killed here today when a bomb exploded in his car as it sped along fashionable Embassy Row.

A woman assistant to Mr. Letelier was killed and a third person was injured. Mr. Letelier was a leader of Chilean political exiles in this country who oppose the military junta that overthrew President Allende in 1973.

The bombing was denounced by Senator James Abourezk, Democrat of South Dakota, who said it "means that the tyranny of the dictatorship in Chile has now been extended in part to the United States. Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts called it "political terrorism."

Incident Latest in a Series
The State Department spokesman, Frederick Z. Brown, said the department "expresses its gravest concern about Dr. Orlando Letelier's death."

The incident was the latest in a series of violent actions against Chilean political exiles since Oct. 3, 1974, when a bomb in Buenos Aires killed Gen. Carlos Prats.

G.O.P. FUND-RAISING IN MICHIGAN STUDIED

Inquiry by Watergate Prosecutor Is Reported—No Charges Made; the White House Asserts

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—The White House said today that President Ford did not need to be defended in connection with an inquiry into Republican fund-raising in Michigan because "nobody has said there has been any wrongdoing" in the case.

Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, made the remarks at a White House briefing when asked to comment on a report in today's issue of The Wall Street Journal that the Watergate special prosecutor was investigating campaign contributions that "involve" Mr. Ford's campaign while he was a Representative from Michigan.

The prosecutor's office declined today to confirm that any investigation was under way. But Paul Henry, the Republican chairman in Kent County, Michigan, said in a telephone interview that records had been subpoenaed by the Watergate prosecutor.

"Cooperating in Every Way"
"We honestly don't know" what the prosecutor is looking for, he said, but "we're cooperating in every way."

The Journal said that Charles H. Ruff, the special prosecutor, had issued a subpoena calling on the Kent County Republican Committee in Grand Rapids, Mich., to produce all of its financial records, minutes and other records from 1964 to the present.

The prosecutor also issued a subpoena for the financial records of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, a maritime union that was Mr. Ford's biggest reported financial contributor in 1972, his last Congressional race, the paper said.

The article quoted Jesse M. Calhoun, head of the marine engineers union, as saying that to disclose the purpose of the investigation "would put me right in the middle of the national election."

At today's regular White House news briefing, Mr. Nessen repeatedly said there was no evidence that the special prosecutor's investigation had anything to do with Mr. Ford.

"There is no suggestion in any way that it has anything to do with the President," Mr. Nessen said, adding, "We have received here no indication that the

Carter Proposes a Unified Agency In the Cabinet for Energy Policy

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times
PLAINS, Ga., Sept. 21—Jimmy Carter proposed today that Federal Government agencies and bodies involved in making policy about energy, regulating the energy industries, and fostering research in the field be combined into a new "cabinet level" government department as the first step in developing a new national energy program.

During more than 19 months of campaigning for the Presidency, Mr. Carter has made "government reorganization" the cornerstone of his campaign, but this is the first specific suggestion he has put forward to illustrate his plans.

Mr. Carter's three-page statement on "energy reorganization," as it was called, made two major points. One was an assertion that two and one-half years after the 1973 oil embargo imposed by Arab states, "our country still has no energy policy." The other—perhaps more important to a candidate who has consistently campaigned against what he calls the "horrible, bloated bureaucracy" of Washington—was that "the President has allowed new agencies, special energy ofices, and special assistance for energy to proliferate throughout the government."

Mr. Carter's statement said he intended to "abolish the Federal Energy Administration, the Federal Power Commission, the Energy Research and Development Administration and the Energy Resources Council." Their functions, he said, would be combined in a new Cabinet-level department on energy.

Other Agencies Included
The statement added that the "functions" of the Departments of Commerce and the Treasury relating solely to energy, the powers of the Security Exchange Commission to enforce the Public Utilities Holding Company Act of 1935, the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate pipelines and the "economic" regulatory functions of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would be folded into the department.

"What is needed," Mr. Carter's statement said, "is organization, not continued

Rate of Inflation Remains Steady For Third Month

Consumer Prices Rose by 0.5% in August

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—Inflation held at a steady pace during August, as lower meat prices took some of the sting out of spurts in the cost of gasoline, clothing and medical care, the Government reported today.

The Labor Department said that consumer prices rose by five-tenths of 1 percent last month. That matched the increases in June and July and kept the annual rate of inflation at 6.2 percent—the same rate it has averaged for the last five months.

The August increase was somewhat higher than Government economists had expected and showed that the inflation rate, while lower than the 8.6 percent rate a year ago, was not yet under control.

White House Encouraged
The White House press secretary, Ron Nessen, said that the Administration was encouraged by the latest figures, asserting that consumer price increases had "been relatively stable over for almost half a year." He added that President Ford believed it was "essential to continue steps to hold inflation."

But when told that the inflation rate was running ahead of the Administration's forecast, Mr. Nessen expressed surprise and said that he was not aware of that.

In July, Mr. Ford's chief economics adviser, Alan Greenspan, predicted a 5 percent increase in consumer prices this year. The Labor Department's report today showed that consumer prices last month were 5.6 percent higher than a

TANZANIAN REPORTS RHODESIAN AGREEING ON BLACK-RULE ISSUE

NYERERE NOW MORE HOPEFUL

After Meeting With Kissinger, He Says Smith Accepts the Principle of Majority Rule Within 2 Years

By JOHN DARNTON
Special to The New York Times
DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania, Sept. 21—President Julius K. Nyerere met with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger today and said afterward that the Rhodesian Prime Minister, Ian D. Smith, had accepted the principle of black majority rule for Rhodesia within two years.

Speaking at a news conference after Mr. Kissinger had reported on his talks with Mr. Smith, the Tanzanian leader said he was now more optimistic over the chances for a peaceful settlement of the Rhodesian conflict.

[In Rhodesia, Prime Minister Smith said the proposals presented to him at his meeting with Mr. Kissinger required cautious deliberation as they involved "the future of Rhodesia." Page 3.]

"Basis for Movement"
President Nyerere said he felt that "a basis for movement forward is there," but he cautioned that negotiations still depended on Mr. Smith's honoring the pledge he apparently gave to Secretary Kissinger in Pretoria, South Africa, on Sunday.

Mr. Nyerere's tone was in marked contrast to the gloom he displayed at a news conference six days ago, when Mr. Kissinger arrived here to start his shuttle trip between black and white Africa.

"I must admit that after speaking to him this morning, my mood is better," he remarked, smiling at a battery of television cameras from a chair on the porch of the state house.

However, another problem in southern Africa—black majority rule with independence for South-West Africa—Mr. Nyerere indicated that no progress had been made. He said he did not expect a constitutional conference to resolve the matter soon.

Work Is Done From Smith
On Rhodesia, President Nyerere said that Mr. Kissinger told him that Mr. Smith would deliver a speech on Friday in which he would "indicate his acceptance" of proposals advanced by the British in March to replace the Government controlled by Rhodesia's 270,000 whites with one representing its six million blacks as well.

The proposals, which followed the breakdown of talks between Mr. Smith and moderate black nationalists, were put forward by James Callaghan, then the British Foreign Secretary but soon after the Prime Minister.

The proposals were based on the acceptance by all sides of several conditions before negotiations began. These included agreements on the principle of majority rule to take place within 18 to 24 months. Mr. Callaghan also called for an agreement that negotiations would not be protracted.

At the time, Mr. Smith rejected these proposals. But mounting guerrilla warfare combined with the prospect of increasing

Monitors Find No Deterioration In Reading of U.S. Schoolchildren

By GENE I. MAEROFF
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—The Federal program for monitoring the achievement of American schoolchildren has found, contrary to the beliefs of many educational critics, that reading ability has not deteriorated during the 1970's and that nine-year-olds, especially, have improved markedly.

This conclusion was announced today by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, which released a report comparing the results of identical tests administered across the country in 1971 and 1975.

"When there is widespread concern about declining test scores," said Dr. Marie D. Eldridge, head of the National Center for Educational Statistics, "it is encouraging to know that children of different age groups are reading better or at least as well as children of a few years ago."

Caution on Specific Reasons
The report, while cautious in presenting specific reasons for the improved reading of nine-year-olds, did offer speculation. Among the developments cited were the wider availability of kindergartens, the existence of Head Start and Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for the disadvantaged, the televising of "Sesame Street" and increased emphasis on reading in primary grades.

The national assessment results are

In Hakodate, Japan, American and Japanese technicians carry equipment used to dismantle the Soviet jet fighter

Experts Find Soviet MIG-25 Falls Below Expectations

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Sept. 21—Fleets by piece, the top-secret MIG-25 jet fighter flown to Japan by a defecting Soviet pilot was being further taken apart at a civilian airfield in northern Japan today, while diplomats here in the capital pondered potential repercussions of the incident in relations with the Soviet Union.

Japanese and American experts, the latter in civilian clothes, worked behind a temporary metal shelter at the Hakodate airport, removing the twin-tail section from what is considered to be the world's most advanced fighter. Its arrival here on Sept. 6 provided the first opportunity outside the Soviet bloc for close inspection of the plane.

The aircraft's sensitive electronic gear appears to be wired with a series of self-destructive devices. Defusing these and other "red switches" is reportedly taking more time than had been expected.

The wings must be removed and then the engines. By the end of the week, a United States C-5A Galaxie transport plane is expected to carry the sections to the Hyakuri Air Base, about 50 miles northeast of here. Local residents, fearing leftist demonstrations or possible Soviet attempts to destroy the MIG-25, are protesting the move as a threat to their peace and security.

The pilot, Lieut. Viktor I. Belenko, after an initial detention, eluded Japanese radar and fighters in making his approach to Hakodate. The lieutenant said he was fleeing a repressive Communist rule and had planned his escape for two years. Intelligence sources, however, say there may have been another, more mundane, reason for the flight to Japan and the unexpected intelligence bonanza. Lieutenant Belenko, they say, had an unhappy marriage.

The Soviet officer is believed to be undergoing intensive interrogation in the vicinity of Washington. He is reported "quite cooperative." Sources here said that the detailed questioning might well last a year.

A Few Weeks to Study Jet

The Japanese, who must live with the Soviet Union just across the Sea of Japan, believe they have only a few weeks, at most, to study the MIG-25. The assumption here is that the plane will be returned to the Russians—in pieces—yet there have been no negotiations yet for a return.

American experts on MIGs did not become openly involved with the highly advanced plane here until Sunday. "Frankly, this MIG-25 was way beyond us," said a Japanese defense official. "We had to have help."

After the pieces of the MIG-25 have been taken to the Hyakuri base, they will be studied in greater detail. But some preliminary findings have been made already.

While a MIG-25 has been recorded by Western radar at speeds 3.2 times that of sound, the airspeed instrument of Lieutenant Belenko's craft, the combat version, went only as high as 2.8, with the highest numeral marked in red as if to warn of danger.

The plane can carry 14 tons of fuel. It contained only three tons when Lieutenant Belenko landed. Much of his flight to Japan was made at low altitude, which required more fuel.

Titanium, a light, heat-resistant but very expensive metal, is used in United States supersonic aircraft such as the reconnaissance SR-71. Experts examining the MIG-25 were surprised to discover that the plane had steel alloy plates on the fuselage, the main wings and on other parts. This would greatly reduce the cost of building the plane. But a stronger engine would be required for the extra weight, with a reduction in range as a result.

Authorities speculate that the MIG-25 flown here has poor acceleration.

The Soviet plane's outlines are similar to those of the McDonnell Douglas F-15 Eagle, a prime candidate to become Japan's next main fighter.

Officially, the Japanese have kept a straight face on the issue of the MIG-25, telling the Russians that they must keep the plane as long as necessary during an investigation into Lieutenant Belenko's violation of Japan's airspace, as well as the matter of damage to Japanese airport equipment when the plane ran off the Hakodate runway, and also the question of imposing an import duty on the multimillion-dollar plane.

New Lebanon To Be Inaug In Syria-He

By HENRY TAN
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Sept. 21—The National Assembly of the Syrian-controlled territory of Lebanon on Thursday to inaugurate his as President.

The decision to hold the inauguration in the Syrian-controlled territory was made by the assembly's Assad, a Moslem, after clear that neither the Lebanese nor the Arab League force could assure the Syrian and Moslem deputies.

The session, if held as planned, would be the first outside the nation's history.

Originally, it was planned to be held at the private residence in the only crossing near generally Christian districts and the mostly Moslem Beirut.

Jumbilat Critic

But the area has been heavily shelling and control of automatic weapons for several days despite the presence of Sudanese soldiers from the force.

Mr. Assad's decision to inaugurate in the Syrian-controlled territory was criticized tonight by Karim al-Farid, leader of the Moslem-left by Raymond Edde, a pro-leader who has refused to join a common front with the Syrian-controlled territory and the Moslem-controlled west.

Both Mr. Jumbilat and Mr. Farid bitterly opposed the inauguration in Beirut.

Even if a number of the Syrian-controlled territory go to Beirut, the inauguration is taken for granted that a large attendance and will take place.

Before making his decision, Mr. Assad consulted the National Assembly to Beirut sought the advice of a constitutional lawyer. The issue of whether a session outside Beirut would be held was constitutionally to meet outside Beirut.

The precedent set by the inauguration at the Presidential Palace, a residential district.

in The New York Times

ALAAAM, Tanzania, Sept. 21—Mr. Kissinger's State Department yesterday was congratulating the news in South Africa that to confer for eight hours with Rhodesia without a graph taken of Mr. Kissinger's white supremacist to-showing him being bugged by President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt and of some- one plunking an Arab headress on him in Jordan.

In Africa, however, Mr. Kissinger has tried to convince the black Africans that he is not a disinterested mediator but rather a skillful advocate of their cause. His problem has been not only to overcome their natural skepticism but also to persuade the white Rhodesians and South Africans that despite his partiality to the black African position, they should use his services.

To them he offered himself as a defense attorney able to get the best possible deal and prevent bloodshed and

Communist intervention from sweeping the area.

For reporters accompanying Mr. Kissinger, this "subtle" lacks the vibrancy of the Middle East missions. In part this is because in the Middle East the reporters themselves indirectly figured in the mediation.

When they flew to Cairo or Alexandria for instance, Egyptian journalists used to question them at length about Israeli policies and intentions. In Jerusalem, the Israeli journalists were deeply curious about the other side and their attitudes toward the Egyptians seemed to be influenced somewhat by what the American reporters told them of Mr. Sadat's moderation and desire for peace.

In Africa, however, in the countries visited so far, local journalists do not seem to want to know what the Americans have seen on the other side. They do not seem to care about American impressions of the black African scene

In such a short period impressions of black and white Africa must inevitably be sketchy. One is struck, however, that unlike the Middle East, where Egypt and Israel, for instance, have very little communication, there is considerable movement back and forth in southern Africa of goods, ideas and people. Black African newspapers have their own correspondents in South Africa, reporting on the latest repression: planes fly between black Africa and South Africa; trade is extensive.

There are also contradictions. Black Africans talk a great deal about liberating Rhodesia and Namibia, as they call South-West Africa, but the ability of Mr. Kissinger to act as a mediator may stem from most African leaders' genuine lack of desire for a major conflict that might have repercussions with their own countries as well.

They cannot tell whether their countries might be bombed in a conflict or whether guerrilla groups on their soil may become powerful military bodies of their own as the Palestinians did in Jordan and Lebanon. And in South Africa, a land blessed with material riches and talented peoples, there is a sense of tragedy. Despite public statements by Mr. Vorster expressing confidence in his ruling Nationalist Party's apartheid policy, many South Africans seem increasingly worried about finding ways of alleviating the racial tensions caused by apartheid before disaster strikes.

Driving around the Pretoria suburbs on a day when the South African summer is just starting, the sense of tragedy is compounded by the beauty of the white neighborhoods, with expensive houses and manicured lawns, and fine gardens. Much of the wealth and attractiveness is the result of low pay for black labor, and in this period of uneasiness in South Africa, one wonders whether these neighborhoods can remain so calm for much longer.

After Cabinet Talks, Says Kissinger Plans Need Deliberation

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

Rhodesia, Sept. 21—Prime Smith emerged today with his Cabinet say- ing of accepting propo- sition settlement that he with Secretary of State er required cautious de- t involved "the future of a lives of our people."

Mr. Smith said that acceptance of the proposals would require a two-thirds ma- jority in the Assembly. Lawyers here said that under Rhodesian law the only legis- lation requiring a two-thirds majority of the votes for passage was that relating to amendment of the Constitution.

Josiah Chinamano, a spokesman here for the nationalist faction led by Joshua Nkomo, said tonight that he had spoken by phone with Mr. Nkomo who had told him that while he did not like everything in Mr. Kissinger's proposals, still "it was a package and as a package we can take it."

Mr. Chinamano said that Mr. Nkomo would arrive here Thursday from Mozam- bique and that he would address a con- gress of his followers in Bulawayo, in the southwestern part of the country, on Sunday. "Now the ball is in Mr. Smith's court," he said.

In another development, the Rhodesian security forces issued a communiqué say- ing that 15 guerrillas and 11 other Afri- cans believed to have been aiding them had been killed in the last three days. In the same period, the statement said, five blacks were killed by guerrillas.

mentary caucus, composed of the 50 members of the Legislative Assembly from his Rhodesian Front party. There are, in addition, eight elected and eight appointed black members of the Assem- bly.

Mr. Smith said that acceptance of the proposals would require a two-thirds ma- jority in the Assembly. Lawyers here said that under Rhodesian law the only legis- lation requiring a two-thirds majority of the votes for passage was that relating to amendment of the Constitution.

Josiah Chinamano, a spokesman here for the nationalist faction led by Joshua Nkomo, said tonight that he had spoken by phone with Mr. Nkomo who had told him that while he did not like everything in Mr. Kissinger's proposals, still "it was a package and as a package we can take it."

Mr. Chinamano said that Mr. Nkomo would arrive here Thursday from Mozam- bique and that he would address a con- gress of his followers in Bulawayo, in the southwestern part of the country, on Sunday. "Now the ball is in Mr. Smith's court," he said.

In another development, the Rhodesian security forces issued a communiqué say- ing that 15 guerrillas and 11 other Afri- cans believed to have been aiding them had been killed in the last three days. In the same period, the statement said, five blacks were killed by guerrillas.

London Dubious on Rhodesia Gains

Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Sept. 21—Britain cast a hopeful but skeptical eye today on re- ports from southern Africa that Rhode- sia's white leadership was prepared to transfer power to the black majority.

In contrast to the rising optimism that has been generated by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's present round of African diplomacy, officials at the Foreign Office here said they wanted to see a "firm commitment" by the Rhodesian leader, Ian D. Smith, before they could pronounce the mission a success.

The officials, who mirrored the thinking of Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland, suggested that Mr. Smith might be engag- ing in an old and favorite device of buy- ing time on the premise that Mr. Kiss- inger might not be in office much longer to enforce any bargain he strikes.

London Foresaw Dangers

The British are, of course, eager to have Mr. Kissinger's efforts succeed, since it was they who gave early warnings to the United States that failure to solve the Rhodesian question could exhaust the patience of black African leaders and lead to widespread racial warfare on the conti- nent.

But the British have considerable ex- perience in dealing with Mr. Smith, most of it painful, ever since the Rhodesian leader unilaterally declared independence from Britain as a means of prolonging the rule of the country's minority whites over its more than six million blacks.

On two occasions, Mr. Smith and for- mer Prime Minister Harold Wilson con- ferred aboard British naval vessels, once in 1966 and again in 1968. On both occa- sions British officials hoped they had wrung concessions from Mr. Smith, and on both occasions they were wrong.

"We ourselves have been around this track before," one Foreign Office spokes- man said.

British officials seemed frankly aston- ished by reports quoting President Julius K. Nyerere of Tanzania as having said that he expected Rhodesia to accept by Friday conditions calling for the estab- lishment of an independent black ma- jority state of Rhodesia in two years.

This was one of the conditions that Prime Minister James Callaghan, in a key speech to the House of Commons on March 22, said Rhodesia must accept be- fore Britain would play any diplomatic and financial role in helping Rhodesia make an orderly transition to a multira- cial society.

"Perhaps Kissinger has got Smith to agree," one official said. "But we want to see Smith's actual language. And even if Smith himself agrees, we want to know, too, whether he can deliver, whether he can sell the idea to the other whites in Rhodesia."

The officials said they would be de- lighted to be proved wrong, and they conceded that "all the logic is on the side of Smith's accepting Kissinger's terms."

"But it's Smith we're worried about, not the logic," one of them emphasized.

pressure from Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa, which is Rhodesia's only lifeline and which fears a spillover of the conflict across its own border, has apparently had an effect.

Mr. Nyerere said that "it looks as if conditions now exist" for the British to convene a constitutional conference involving all parties to the Rhodesian conflict.

But serious obstacles toward a settlement remain.

Mr. Smith must obtain approval for the move from his Cabinet and the 50-member caucus of the ruling Rhodesian Front Party, which includes some strong right-wingers adamantly opposed to sharing political power with blacks.

It is generally thought that the Rhodesian black nationalists, who have split into four feuding factions, would have to present some form of united front at a negotiating table.

Definition Is Debatable

There is wide room for disagreement over precisely what the definition of majority rule is—whether it is the strict application of the principle of "one man, one vote" or, as Mr. Smith is likely to contend, some less sweeping change involving separate voter rolls that would increase black representation while maintaining disproportionate power for whites. Mr. Smith has asserted that majority rule—meaning "rule by the responsible majority"—already exists in the country.

There is always the possibility that Mr. Smith, who in the past has seemed willing to compromise only to draw back once negotiations begin, could once again renegate. Addressing this possibility, Mr. Nyerere said in response to a question that he did not believe Mr. Smith "will change."

"But if the United States were to say to Smith 'the game is up,' Smith is not so foolish not to understand he can't go on," Mr. Nyerere added. "I would be very silly for Mr. Smith at this late hour to try and fool anybody."

Mr. Nyerere, who has acted as spokesman and chairman for the five "front-line" African presidents who have been planning the overthrow of white supremacy, indicated that he had not spoken recently to all four of his colleagues—Presidents Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia, Samora Machel of Mozambique, Seretse Khama of Botswana, and Agostinho Neto of Angola. But he implied that their reactions would be the same as his.

Kissinger Reports to Kaunda

Before coming here from Pretoria, Mr. Kissinger stopped in Lusaka to report to Mr. Kaunda, who did not appear unhappy with what he heard. Mr. Kissinger met briefly last night with Joshua Nkomo, a moderate Rhodesian nationalist leader who engaged in the talks with Mr. Smith in March, at the request of Mr. Kaunda.

In the space of one week Mr. Kissinger's shuttle took him to three African capitals—Dar es Salaam, Lusaka and Pretoria—and involved more than 40 hours of negotiations. During his talks with both black and white leaders he was said to have outlined a plan to encourage whites to stay in Rhodesia under a black government with financial guarantees and to compensate them if they leave.

Mr. Kissinger flew tonight to Kinshasa, Zaire, where he is scheduled to meet with President Mobutu Sese Seko. He will then fly to Kenya to see President Jomo Kenyatta before returning to Washington.

Snag on South-West Africa

Special to The New York Times

Johannesburg, Sept. 21—A refusal by Prime Minister John Vorster to consider direct talks between South Africa and the major black nationalist group, the South-West African People's Organization, is believed to have been a key obstacle to progress on the issue of South-West Africa in Mr. Vorster's weekend discussions with Secretary Kissinger.

Additional complications apparently were posed by a decision taken last week by a constitutional committee to divide the territory into a committee, devising a constitution. The committee, however, certain governing powers would be reserved for tribes chosen on an ethnic basis.

the part of those who believe in civilized drawn from consideration

before the opening gavel:
the Middle East.
The fear of losing some of the gains of recent years, emerged from consideration of a resolution demanding with-

Moments later, South

U.S.-Soviet Talks on Strategic Arms Resume in Geneva, but Progress During Election Campaign Is Doubtful

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—The slow-moving strategic arms talks resumed in Geneva today, their future now beclouded by a Presidential campaign in the United States.

After a summer-long recess, American and Soviet negotiators renewed their discussions of a treaty that would impose ceilings on the strategic weapons permitted the two nations—an objective that President Ford and Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, agreed upon in principle at Vladivostok two years ago.

With no political desire to call attention to the talks, the United States handled the resumption in low-keyed fashion. The State Department did not even put out an announcement, as it has in the past, that the American delegation, headed by U. Alexis Johnson, was returning to Geneva.

With detente no longer a popular political cause and with no progress to point to in the negotiations, the United States evidently did not want to raise the strategic arms issue in the Presidential campaign.

The talks resumed with both sides still deadlocked over whether the proposed treaty should cover a long-range bomber being deployed by the Soviet Union and the cruise missile being developed by the United States.

The American delegation, according to officials, returned with no new proposals or concessions to offer on the two interrelated weapons issues, both of which emerged after the Vladivostok meeting.

At Vladivostok an agreement was reached in principle that a new treaty should limit each side to 2,400 strategic missile launchers and bombers and that within that overall total each side would be limited to 1,320 launchers for missiles carrying multiple warheads. For more than a year, the two sides have been negotiating with no success over whether the bomber and the cruise missile, which is a highly accurate, jet-powered drone, should somehow be included within these overall limitations.

As described by policy-making officials, the United States position is that it is now up to the Soviet Union to make a move to break the deadlock. To a certain extent, it was acknowledged, this position was influenced by a desire not to take any potentially controversial initiatives in the midst of the election campaign.

It is unclear whether the Soviet Union also will feel inhibited by election-year politics in the United States from making a move. On that point, there is divided opinion within the United States Government.

One school of thought contends that if the Soviet Union is interested in an agreement, as is generally presumed, then it will be more interested in negotiating with President Ford, who is a known quantity, than in delaying and possibly having to negotiate with Jimmy Carter, the Democratic candidate, whose views are not so well known by the Russians.

Even in the unlikely event that a quick agreement was reached, the resulting treaty could not be considered by the Senate until next year, a fact well understood by the Soviet Union.

The prevailing view, therefore, is that the talks will bring to a close in November, as the United States awaits any action that would be taken by the Soviet Union after the election and the Soviet Union sees the outcome of the election.

If President Ford is elected, officials see some possibility that he will be more eager to deal with the Russians than Mr. Ford in a position to make decisions.

If, on the other hand, Mr. Carter is elected, officials foresee a more difficult negotiation, as the new Administration seeks to develop its position and size up a new American

Surprise for Polish Communists: Leaders Lost Touch With Public Opinion

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

WARSAW, Sept. 21—The Polish Communist Party's leadership has been severely shaken by its finding that it lost touch with public opinion.

That was the inevitable conclusion last June when workers, rioting after the sudden announcement of a sharp rise in food prices, forced the cancellation of measures that are economically essential.

According to a high Communist source, among the efforts the Government had made to test the likely reaction was to consult the first secretaries of the 50 provincial party committees. Only one warned that the increases would cause popular unrest; the others said the people understood the need for the move and would accept it.

Furthermore, the source said, Soviet leaders expressed misgivings over the Polish plans, suggesting that the increases were too big and too sudden to be imposed without risk. Warsaw's answer was that the Polish Communists knew their country better than the Russians did and had prepared their plan well enough to be satisfied that it would work.

Gierek Assumed Responsibility
The person primarily blamed by the public has been Prime Minister Piotr Jaroszewicz, but the Communist Party leader, Edward Gierek, announced immediately after the riots that he took full responsibility.

No authoritative source would explain just how it happened that a planned and widely expected increase of 30 percent was abruptly doubled and tripled for various commodities, especially meat. The most credible report was that Mr. Jaroszewicz, with the support of a majority of the party Politburo, urged the bigger increase and that Mr. Gierek, initially reluctant, agreed to go along.

The reasoning offered by Polish Communists was that they thought they had explained the economic crisis—principally soaring imports and inadequate exports—sufficiently well and had developed enough understanding of the country's painful plight so that it would be easier and better to make the change in one surgical slash than to do it in gradual steps, accompanied by continual disclosures of unpleasant facts.

It was the pride of the Gierek administration that it had opened communications with a long-suffering and hostile populace and had won enough popularity to stabilize the regime.

Like a Western Candidate
Indeed, Mr. Gierek had introduced the practice of traveling around the country holding public meetings, addressing the workers and trying to test their mood. A Western diplomat said that before the party congress last December the First Secretary was dashing around almost as though he was a candidate for re-election in a Western country.

The public reaction in June showed the Communists that, as one of them put it,

"we had been talking to ourselves."

In previous periods of similar tension there was violence and even the threat of war. In 1956 the people did not rise, but there was a threat of conflict between the Polish and Soviet Armies. In the aftermath of the Polish crisis the people of Hungary revolted and fought Soviet tanks.

In 1970 there was bloody fighting when troops suppressed Polish workers demonstrating in Gdansk. At that time, Polish Communists now confirm, the then party leader, Wladyslaw Gomulka, suggested calling in the Soviet Army but agreed to resign instead.

Doubts About the Troops
No one would predict what could happen if the workers went on the warpath again, but ranking Communists said they could not rely on the army and militia to put down disorder.

Over the years since Mr. Gierek replaced Mr. Gomulka, meetings have become more and more formal and artificial, like prearranged military inspections, a worried Communist official said.

Underlying the current distress is the almost unavowed recognition that the party has tried virtually every way it can think of to be successful and popular. Mr. Gierek's approach involved major concessions—almost as far as a Communist Party can go and keep a firm hold on power, in the view of some members.

One crude but apt summary of the Gierek policy was that "the party decided to stuff the people's mouth with sausage so they would not talk back, and now there is no sausage."

The gamble was based on a crash program of industrial development, financed by Western credits and opening the country to Western trade. It was intended to induce a rapid rise in living standards and convince the people that the Communists were fully able to serve their needs under a continued monopoly of power. It was aimed to please workers and farmers directly, bypassing intellectuals, who have always been critics and mavericks in Poland and who, the leaders calculated, were not so important to the masses anyway.

For a complex of reasons, some having to do with the world economy and hence, beyond Warsaw's control, some resembling the problems of overeasy growth in any social system and some specifically Polish, the program ran into serious trouble. Apparently the dominant view of the leaders now is that this was partly bad luck and partly correctable mistakes, and that some policy tacks and a few more years of breathing space will still bring success.

Tacking and maneuvering for time are the problems under immediate discussion in the party's upper ranks.

Meanwhile, the shock of unconcealable setbacks and the revelation of popular frustration and impatience have posed the nagging question whether even the Gierek formula is the magic answer for successful Communism in an industrializing nation. If it is not, then what? some of the people at the top are a find no answers.

Their situation is complicated by the fact that Poland's Plunked well within the East considered a vital security of Soviet Union, Poland does not the option of balance between the possibility of open borders Yugoslavia does.

Little Gain Since Helsinki Accords, Eastern and Western Aides Agree

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE
Special to The New York Times

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 20—For differing reasons, Western and Communist diplomats are expressing growing agreement that the 1975 Helsinki summit meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe has produced disappointingly few results.

The meeting of the leaders of 35 nations, including President Ford, which came at the conclusion of nearly two years of consultation in Western Europe, is under particular scrutiny because the participants are to gather again next summer in Belgrade to assess accomplishments.

Two weeks ago President Tito of Yugoslavia and President Nicolae Ceausescu of Rumania joined those who have expressed disappointment with what has happened since the Helsinki meeting. Marshal Tito, toasting Mr. Ceausescu, who was spending four days in this country, said of the results of the Helsinki conference that "so far, unfortunately, these were few." His guest replied that "after the Helsinki conference no concrete measures were taken for the adopted documents" and that a great deal of progress would be necessary if the Belgrade meeting was to be successful.

West Keeping a Tally Sheet
Since the Helsinki meeting, which was from July 30 to Aug. 1, 1975, the Eastern European embassies of most Western European nations and the United States have been keeping a tally on the Communist governments' compliance with the agreement. The results vary from one country to another, of course, but some trends are clear.

For example, the Soviet Union permitted 13,238 people to emigrate during 1975, according to the Geneva-based Intergovernmental Committee on European Migration. This was 3,600 fewer than were permitted to leave the previous year.

The meeting was the culmination of 22 months of negotiations, chiefly between the Soviet Union, which was eager for it to take place, and the United States, which insisted on conditions.

In substance the Helsinki agreements formally recognized and guaranteed the de facto national borders of Europe that had existed since World War II. Moscow and its allies, which had acquired vast territories as a result of the defeat of Nazi Germany, were the main beneficiaries of this.

Another part of the accords provided that the participants should notify each other in advance when holding military maneuvers and institute other safeguards against the accidental start of war.

Aim Was to Increase East-West Flow
Terms on which the United States insisted, the so-called third basket, were intended to increase the free flow of people and information between Eastern and Western Europe.

Nonetheless, cultural and literary periodicals published by American and Western European sponsors are still rarely seen in Eastern Europe, except in hotel reading rooms frequented by foreign visitors. At the same time Western news correspondents who do not live in the Soviet Union have generally been finding it at least as hard as ever to obtain visas to Eastern European countries and in some cases harder. Similarly, the Soviet Union and most of its allies have continued to jam certain Western broadcasts, notably those of the American-sponsored Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty.

Despite pressure from France, the United States and other Western nations for an increase in the rate at which separated families are allowed to reunite, progress has been slow. Western and Communist diplomats agree.

As for measures to prevent inadvertent hostilities, Western attaches have accepted Soviet invitations to witness military maneuvers, but the Communist countries have consistently turned down reciprocal invitations. While the Helsinki document does not oblige a government to send observers to another's maneuvers, willingness to do so is regarded in military circles as a token of common interest in reducing tensions. Western military men and diplomats consider the Soviet refusal to observe the Atlantic alliance's maneuvers as a sign of unwillingness to go beyond the letter of Helsinki even on minor matters.

For their part, Communist leaders accuse the West for responsibility for the lack of progress in carrying out the terms of the Helsinki agreements, in particular for the absence of progress at the major world conferences designed to halt the arms race.

There is a feeling among Yugoslav officials and those of a number of other European countries that, if anything, the dangers of a European war are greater now than they were before the Helsinki conference.

Thailand Will Oust Ex-Military Ruler

BANGKOK, Thailand, Sept. 21 (AP)—Prime Minister Seni Pramoj said today that Thailand's former military ruler, Thanom Kittakachorn, who returned from exile to visit his ailing father and enter a Buddhist monastery, would be asked to leave the country after the death of his father.

Mr. Seni told reporters after a nine-hour Cabinet meeting that a three-man committee would convey the Government decision to the 66-year-old former Prime Minister, who was deposed nearly three years ago. A Government announcement urged the population to "keep peace in the country."

Student and labor leaders earlier called on Mr. Seni to explain the Government's stand on Mr. Thanom. They have called for his deportation or trial in connection with the deaths of 72 civilians in the 1973 student uprising that led to Mr. Thanom's overthrow.

ITS BACK PLAN SCIENCE COURT

in Virginia Decides of Quasi-Judicial Should Be Tested

BY NICKLE WILFORD
 at the New York Times

VA., Sept. 21—The proposed science court whose time had been set for a public hearing in some of the most perplexing cases of the inventions of science and technology, and skeptics were more circumspect. They feared that it would be a quasi-judicial body, possibly vulnerable to the influence of clever advocates, and that it might stifle important public participation and discussion.

Proponents and critics generally agreed at a two-day conference here that to establish an impartial, science court should be based on experimental basis. Such a court would be called on to weigh the risks behind controversial technologies such as nuclear reactor safety, the use of pesticides, the use of fluorocarbons on the ozone layer.

Opposition Favors Experiment

In favor of an experimental idea, Secretary of Commerce L. Richardson said today. He said the idea was uncomfortable—indeed, by the awareness that decisions are to such a degree uncertain.

Richardson said that the experiment would shed light on the kind of issues that could be brought to a court, the most effective way to resolve them, and how well a court could function between the strictly scientific controversy and political considerations.

A strong supporter of the court was Dr. H. Guyford Stever, a physicist at the University of Maryland, to President Ford.

250 scientists, engineers, officials, lawyers and business leaders gathered for the Colloquium on the Science Court, which was sponsored by the Department of Commerce, the National Academy of Sciences, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the American Society for Training and Management.

Support Gets New Support

The science-court concept has been on and off for several years and has attracted considerable attention only in recent months, the result of its advocacy by Dr. Irving L. Janowitz, chairman of Avco Research Laboratories, Everett, Mass.

Janowitz heads a panel that will report on the Presidential Commission on Anticipated Advances in Science and Technology. Through this report, the concept has drawn the support of many policy makers.

The report, published in the Aug. 20 issue of the magazine, Dr. Janowitz's group outlined the possible procedures for such a court, explaining:

"In many cases to which technology is applied, no scientific facts are known. It is to important public decisions, there is a pressing need for better methods for resolving them to provide a sounder basis for decisions. We accordingly propose a series of experiments to develop procedures to test their effectiveness in resolving technical disputes over scientific fact.

"The approach is embodied in a science court that is to be convened to hear questions of scientific fact and social value questions that require public decisions—to the decision-making apparatus of our government, the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government, as well as the people.

"The technical controversies are to be heard in public, technical decisions are to be made but not challenged or appealed. Instead the proponents of technical claims, and the opponents, are to generate enormous commitments of the public. One of the purposes of the science court is to create a forum in which the adversaries direct their arguments at each other and at the general public, rather than at the general public."

Objections and Problems Cited

Some objections and problems with the concept were raised during the colloquium. One of the most persistent objections was calling it a court.

Richardson said that it was an unfortunate name because it implied a decision, which would emphasize a decision but not necessarily a search for truth. He proposed, instead, that the procedure be called something of scientific and technology.

Dr. Mead, the anthropologist and former president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, opposed the experiment because it would date a method of organization of scientists in such a way that it would be of some use to decision-making.

Others questioned the adversary procedure. A proposal is to have "case managers" to present the best arguments on each major side and to have the findings presented to a panel of judges. The judges would be eminent scientists who are in the controversy or a mixed panel of legal authorities.

Adversary Procedure Opposed

Some objected to the adversary procedure, she said, that the duty "polarize" the issue, and that the more eloquent or prestigious the advocates tend to make it a win-lose procedure rather than a search for known truth in a case.

Others in the audience agreed that the legal system of the United States might be a more suitable one than Anglo-Saxon common law. They said that if the court assumes a greater investigative and judicial

British M.P.'s to Face Rising Scottish Demand: 'It's Our

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times
ALLOA, Scotland, Sept. 16—Thirty-six years with the railway, and 36 years a Scottish Nationalist, was the way Eddie Ewins described himself as he and a passenger waited the other evening for the late-night sleeper from Inverness to London.

It did not much matter to him that the railroad he works for is called British Rail (and not Scottish Rail or English Rail), or that if his ideas were taken to their most extreme conclusion, passengers traveling from London might someday have to carry passports to get into Scotland. Eddie Ewins is simply fed up with "London government," wants independence for Scotland, and doesn't worry about the consequences.

Not everyone in Scotland feels the way he does. Those who want complete separation are a distinct, if growing, minority. But there are enough people in Scotland who want at least some form of self-government that the issue of Scottish nationalism is almost certain to be the most important and divisive subject in the session of Parliament that opens in just over two weeks.

"We've been waiting for this," said Robert Cochrane, who takes over from Mr. Ewins at about midnight as the chief ticket-taker and baggage master at the Stirling passenger depot in central Scotland. "They're going to have to give us something this time."

The "they" in Mr. Cochrane's comment is the Labor Government in London, which has been thrashing around desperately for months in an effort to devise legislation that will satisfy Scottish aspirations but stop short of mandating the complete breakup of the United Kingdom.

Their answer, to be offered in detailed legislation soon is "devolution"—the granting of selected powers to a new and locally elected Scottish Assembly.

But to many Scots this is a misery offer. What they want is not just planning power but economic power. They want not only the revenue from the North Sea oil that lies off their coast but also the right to spend it and to raise their own taxes.

"Whatever else you hear," George Reid, one of the Scottish Nationalist Party's 11 members in the House of Commons, said the other day, "what this is all about is the principle of having the economic benefits of our own resources—our timber, our fishing, and our oil."

George Reid is the most popular politician in Clackmannan county, which lies to the north and west of Edinburgh, and which he has represented in Parliament since 1974, when the Scottish Nationalist Party suddenly sent 11 of

The New York Times/Robert B. Semple Jr. Eddie Ewins, British Rail Employee, dislikes "London government" and wants independence for Scotland.

Scotland's 71 members to Parliament while winning nearly 30 percent of the vote with the slogan, "It's Scotland's oil."

Mr. Reid reminds one of a younger Charles Percy, the Republican Senator from Illinois—short, compact, handsome, well-tailored, smooth. His family has roots near Alloa, Clackmannan's industrial center, going back four centuries.

Joyce Watt, here with her daughter, thinks the Nationalists are and even "racist" in that some of [them] really seem to hate England. "I want no part of that," she says.

A former television broadcaster, he returned to Scotland because that is where he wanted to raise his children. And he joined the Scottish Nationalist Party and got into politics when he decided that Scotland would be a better place to raise his children if it could win economic independence.

"Our problem is unemployment, which is worse than England's," he said the other day. "Oil alone will not solve it. The oil will run out, but what it will do, if we get our fair share of it directly, is give us the capital to create our own self-sustaining base."

According to polls, true separatists represent only about one-fifth of Scotland's people. Another one-fifth want no change, while the rest favor some form of regional rule. This big group is the confused middle. Sometimes they vote for the Nationalists but usually they sit around wishing that their own parties would be more at the issues.

Joyce Watt, who lives in town of Tillicoultry, is one. She thinks the Nationalists are even "racist," in that those S.N.P. people really hate Englishmen, adding, "I want no part of that."

She is also a strong supporter of the Labor Government. She is doing a much better job of advertising the devolution.

"We got to work hard out the perils of nations going to happen to the head of the roads," she says. "Who runs the roads?" And she concedes that lists are currently more only because they appear "What worries me is the not interested in the Labor think the whole idea of the Scots' is so rampant. Reid's people run around 'Down with Labor' up with it's hard for some to resist.

Juliana Urges Dutch to Put the Past Behind

THE HAGUE, Sept. 21 (AP)—Without referring directly to her husband's disgrace in the Lockheed Aircraft scandal, Queen Juliana called on the Dutch today to put the past behind them and "look forward to the many things confronting us."

Prince Bernhard sat beside the Queen in the Parliament's picturesque Hall of Knights as the monarch delivered her annual speech at the opening of the parliamentary session.

As in past years, Prince Bernhard rode to Parliament with his wife in a golden coach but in civilian clothes in place of his former military regalia.

Crowds waved along the route and guardsmen came smartly to attention as the royal couple stepped from their ornate horse-drawn carriage.

The Prince, in gray morning dress, handed down the Queen from the carriage and followed her between lines of waiting dignitaries into the centuries-old hall. He bowed formally to the assembled legislators and members of the diplomatic corps, then took a seat on the smaller of two thrones.

Prince Bernhard was forced to resign his defense posts as a result of an official finding that he had been "extremely imprudent" in his dealings with the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

"Undoubtedly thoughts to the difficult period of the us," Queen Juliana said in the opening of her speech. "Be a common responsibility, mainly look forward to things confronting us."

She then went on to disavow the government's legislative program that strict wage and price controls would continue in an effort to combat inflation, now at a rate of 10 percent annually. The Queen said other Government measures include plans to promote investment and to provide assistance that were in trouble.

Regulations on the Establishment of Fees on Individual Retirement Accounts Are Criticized by Accountant

By FRANCIS CERRA
 Staff Writer of The New York Times
 SEPTEMBER 21—The retirement plans of millions of Americans are being criticized by Congress today. The Internal Revenue Service act to regulate the sale of Individual Retirement Accounts, a House bill, was passed today.

Mr. Mintz, who testified today at a hearing into the progress being made by the Internal Revenue Service and other agencies regulating the sale of these accounts, said that consumers are making costly mistakes in choosing accounts because of inadequate disclosure of necessary information. He said that unless the I.R.S. puts regulations into effect by Oct. 1, the sale of such accounts should be suspended.

Individual retirement accounts have been available since the beginning of 1975 to workers whose employers do not have pension plans for them. Such workers may, under law, place 15 percent of their wages, up to a maximum of $1,500 in a so-called I.R.A. account. The money is not taxed until it is drawn out of the account at retirement.

Concern about the sale of these accounts has centered on insurance companies, whose annuity policies usually carry a "load" or fee.

Widely Differing Fees
 Subcommittee staff members, in an example given to a reporter, said that if a person put $1,489.97 into an annuity sold by the North American Company for life and health insurance last year, his balance in the account would have been $142.44 at the end of that first year. The rest of that money would have gone to fees.

Under the law which set up the accounts, no restrictions were placed on the amount that might be charged in fees, and Mr. Mintz gave numerous examples of widely differing ones.

However, many banks and savings and loans charge no fees at all on I.R.A. accounts.

The temporary regulations require that prospective purchasers receive detailed information about the accounts before they purchase them, or, at worst, on the day of purchase. How well sellers of accounts are complying with these regulations is being investigated by the I.R.S. and the Federal Trade Commission.

However, the form of information required by the regulations has been criticized as inadequate and incomprehensible to the average person. Mr. Mintz said he believed they could be made simple and effective.

Grain Inspection Bill Defies Pact, But Conferees Will Try Again

By WILLIAM ROBBINS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—A Senate-House conference committee failed today to reach agreement on a bill to reform the nation's scandal-ridden grain inspection system after intensive lobbying by Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz and his top assistant against a Senate compromise proposal.

However, the conferees agreed to study the issue overnight and make another attempt at agreement tomorrow.

Citing months of work, heavy expenditures on investigations and the extent of corruption exposed thus far in the grain industry, Senator Herman E. Talmadge, Democrat of Georgia, told the conferees:

"It would be tragic if we let this Congress adjourn sine die without passing legislation to deal with the massive fraud affecting our grain export trade."

Head of Senate Conferees.

Mr. Talmadge, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, is head of the Senate conferees.

The key vote was 5-to-5 among House conferees, who thus deadlocked over acceptance of a further concession on a compromise offer that had been drafted by Senator Dick Clark, Democrat of Iowa. The position of Secretary Butz and Under Secretary John A. Knebel conflicted with that of the Republican Vice-Presidential nominee, Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, who had said in a statement read by Senator Clark that "it's a good bill and will restore integrity to the grain inspection system."

The Senate and House had passed sharply different bills after widespread corruption in the grain trade was exposed by Federal investigators. More than 65 indictments have been returned on charges ranging from bribery of inspectors to thefts of grain through short-weighting of shipments.

At present, grain is inspected either by state agencies or by private organizations designated by the Department of Agriculture. Both the private and state agencies are paid for their services by the companies whose grain they inspect.

Critics have charged that the system involves an inherent conflict of interest.

The Senate bill would create an all-Federal inspection agency. The House bill would require either Federal or state inspection of grain for export but would leave private agencies in business at inland terminals.

The Clark compromise would allow state and private agencies now operating to continue as in the House bill but would limit any expansion of their duties. Other provisions would encourage expansion of the Federal role in grain inspection.

Mr. Knebel said today that he and Secretary Butz had called most House conferees to "point out" that the compromise was a "thinly veiled version" of the Senate bill, which the Administration opposes.

Hiring in Northeast Encouraged As U.S. Finds Slower Wage Rises

By MICHAEL STERNE

The wages of workers in the Northeast are rising more slowly than the wages of workers in other parts of the country, and this is enhancing the competitiveness of the Northeast as a place to do business, a United States Department of Labor official reported yesterday.

Herbert Bienstock, regional commissioner of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, said the pattern of slower pay rises in the Northeast had been apparent in the three quarters between September 1975 and June 1976.

In these nine months, the bureau's new employment cost index rose 3.8 percent in the Northeast, compared to rises of 5.2 percent in the South, 5.4 percent in the North Central region, 8 percent in the West and 5.5 percent for the nation as a whole.

Although the slower rate of increases means workers in the Northeast may find it harder to keep up with rising living costs, it also may make it possible in time for more of them to find jobs. Employment in the region, which includes the six New England states and New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, rose hardly at all in the year since June 1975, while employment in the nation as a whole rose to the highest levels ever recorded.

New York State Leads High

Mr. Bienstock said that among the 20 states with the highest rates of job gain, all but four were in the South or West. By contrast, employment in the Northeast increased only 7,000, as a drop of 81,000 in New York state offset almost all of the gain of 88,000 recorded in the other states of the region.

Though wages now are rising more slowly in the Northeast, the New York City area, the largest labor market in the region, had been leading the pace of increases in the nation from 1961 to 1974 and in many occupations had established very high pay levels.

In a luncheon address to the New York Compensation Association at the Yale Club, and in data sheets he made public later, Mr. Bienstock pointed out that the pay of office and clerical workers rose 87.1 percent in the New York area from 1961 to 1974. This was a larger increase than in any other of the large metropolitan areas and significantly more than the increase of 79.2 percent for the nation as a whole.

Unskilled Workers Combed

For skilled maintenance workers, the New York area increase in those years was 98 percent, compared to 89.9 percent for the nation; for unskilled plant workers, the increases were 105.7 for the New York area and 91.6 percent for the nation.

As a result of these trends, by 1974, wage levels in the New York area exceeded the average for all metropolitan areas by 5 percent for messengers, 8 percent for senior stenographers, 13 percent for accounting clerks, 11 to 13 percent for computer programmers, 14 percent for machinists, 28 percent for janitors, porters and cleaners and 30 percent for guards and watchmen.

Since businessmen have blamed generally higher costs in the Northeast for the declines in employment in the region, a slowing of the rate of increase for wages, a major element in the cost of production, could help to arrest this trend.

Mr. Bienstock noted what he called "a considerable lag" in employment growth in the older industrial states of the Northeast. From 1969 to 1975, while employment in the nation as a whole was rising by 12.7 percent, it fell by 3 percent in the region.

While the cost of business differentials was a major factor in the shift of employment to other regions, population shifts also were a major cause. From 1970 to 1975, the Northeast and North Central states were losing population while the Southern and Western states were gaining.

BUS STRIKE IN CAIRO ENDS AMID CHARGES OF SABOTAGE

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Sept. 21—A two-day bus strike that tied up Cairo over the weekend has ended in violence and sabotage. The strike, described here as the highest in Egyptian public utilities in 20 years, began Saturday and ended yesterday morning.

Sunday afternoon, just as President Anwar el-Sadat was thanking the nation for having elected him to a second term of office, policemen and soldiers charged strikers at a suburban station. The strikers threw rocks. A number of people on both sides were injured.

During the strike, two buses were moved onto railroad tracks south of Cairo but were removed by policemen before trains could crash into them. A number of newly purchased buses, important to Cairo's overcrowded and aging buses, were sabotaged, according to Prime Minister Mamedouh Salem.

In an interview published here today, Mr. Salem charged that Communists and "a minority of Marxist extremists" attempted to exploit the suffering of the people and to incite resentment. He added that 11 Communists had been arrested and were being interrogated.

Under most circumstances, strikes are illegal in Egypt.

Episcopal Bishops Urge That 15 Woman Priests Be Ordained Again

By ELEANOR BLAU
Special to The New York Times
MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 21—The House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church today urged that the 15 women who had been irregularly ordained to the priesthood undergo "conditional" ordination in case their original ordinations were not valid.

a "mind-of-the-house" statement that would not require concurrence from the House of Deputies, the lay and clerical part of this legislative convention.
"I see it as an expression of mind, not as a directive," said John M. Allin, president of the 2.8-million-member church.

is a proper pastoral concern of the whole church.
Opposing adoption of the statement, J. Stuart Wetmore, Suffragan Bishop of New York, said, "I beg you to avoid putting out some national fiat that provides no negotiating room for diocesan bishops."

bishops decided to keep "conditional"—a term used usually in connection with baptism when it is not known if a previous baptism was valid.
The House of Bishops stated soon after the 1974 ordinations that they were not valid because they did not fulfill canonical and constitutional requirements.

THE CONSUMER'S CALCULATOR: TRICKS FOR YOU

Here are some "quick and clean" ways your calculator can improve your personal money management

By now you either own a pocket calculator or are seriously planning to buy one. It's a fascinating gadget, and it can help you get your money's worth as a consumer in many everyday ways. Here are some suggestions.

In the Supermarket

The simplest thing you can do with a calculator is to add rapidly and accurately. So it can help control your spending. You can do a running total as you go through the store to make sure you're keeping to your spending plan. At the very least you won't have an

The key in comparing unit prices always work with the same unit. In the small box, the cereal costs 43¢ ÷ 7 oz. = 6.14¢ per ounce. In the large box, first convert one ounce into total ounces:

1 lb. = 16 oz. + 2oz.

The cost is $1.17, which is 117¢ ÷ 18 = 6.5¢.

The larger box is more ounce and so the smaller.

If your calculator has a store function, you can store the running total.

From time to time you can check a grocery bill. As you go through the store to make sure you're keeping to your spending plan.

At the very least you won't have an unpleasant surprise at the checkout counter.

Your calculator also makes it much easier to compare prices. It can't compare quality, but it can easily compare price per unit right in the store—the price that counts. For example:

A seven-ounce box of breakfast cereal costs 43¢. A one-pound, two-ounce box costs $1.17. Which is a better buy?

Suppose your total comes to $7.53 and the tax: $7.53 × .08 = $.61 or 61¢—your cost.

Around Home

An important use of a home is to compute wall area, most of which is in rectangles. Of course, a rectangle is length times width, and then multiply the total.

Suppose you want to tile a room, you need to know the area of the calculator.

Chances are you'll find that the carpet is a better buy.

TWA. It's the businessman's air in

The airline passenger today usually has a choice of airlines to the same destination. It's a fact of life for TWA, United or American. But while we all face competition, TWA faces the most.

We're concentrated in large metropolitan airports where competition is keenest. United and American pick up much of their business

Best because TWA has the best on-time record.

TWA has beaten American and United's on-time record for the last 15 months through the latest reporting period, June 1976.

These statistics are shown in CAB records for flights actually flown and include the busiest city-to-city flight segments representing 55% of TWA's available seat miles and 70% since May.

The record shows that TWA has the best on-time performance on more routes where we compete with American or United — based on percent of arrivals within 15 minutes of schedule.

And we're committed to doing even better. In fact, we're out to be on time every time we fly, everywhere we fly... to cities like...

LOS ANGELES	ON TIME
SAN FRANCISCO	ON TIME
CHICAGO	ON TIME
DENVER	ON TIME
ST. LOUIS	ON TIME
PITTSBURGH	ON TIME

Best because TWA has more carry-on luggage compartments.

TWA is the airline that introduced carry-on luggage compartments. And we still have more full-size carry-on compartments than American or United.

We have them on fully 99% of all our flights.

So if you like to take your luggage on the plane with you, the plane is TWA's.

Using TWA reservations has extra fast response time.

When you call TWA you get action.
Our reservation System is fully automated and computerized on a 24-hour, 7-day basis.
We'll make the vast majority of all calls within 20 seconds. You can get instant

We serve 460 airlines and over 35,000 origins and destinations.
If you have an airline reservation to make, make your call to TWA.

Best because TWA has the best in-flight entertainment.

TWA introduced in-flight movies and we still have a greater variety of

U.S. Indicts 5 Croatian Hijackers; Cites Bomb Note Delivered on Jet

By MAX H. SEIGEL

A Federal grand jury in Brooklyn yesterday indicted the hijackers on Sept. 10 of a Trans World Airlines jet, charging them with air piracy and causing the death of a New York City police officer.

The indictment also cited a letter delivered aboard the plane that warned of bombs.

In a statement accompanying the three-count indictment, David G. Trager, the United States Attorney for the Eastern District, said he would consider whether to ask for the death penalty after a study of the trial transcript.

"The propriety of the death penalty," he said, "depends on the assessment of a number of factors relating both to the commission of the offense and the role of each individual defendant."

Zvonko Basic, 28 years old, of 303 West 76th Street, a Croatian described as the ringleader of the hijackers, is said to have told investigators he alone had been responsible for planning and carrying out the hijacking.

Wife Is Indicted

Named with him in the indictment were his wife, Julienne, 27, Peter Matzanic, 31, of 340 Saw Mill River Road, Yonkers; Mark Vlasic, 29, of 1641 East Main Street, Stamford, Conn., and Franje Pesut, 25, of 261 Walker Street, Fairview, N. J.

The first count of the indictment charges all five with using the threat of violence to seize control of the plane, bound from New York for Chicago with 92 persons aboard, and with causing the death of the police officer, Brian J. Murray, 27, as a result of the hijacking.

The second count charges only the air piracy, and the third count charges all with conspiracy to commit air piracy.

Mr. Trager said yesterday that conviction on the first count would result in either the death penalty or mandatory life imprisonment, that conviction on the second count carried a penalty of 20 years to life imprisonment, and conviction on the third, a penalty of five years in prison.

In addition to specifying the charges, the indictment made public for the first time the contents of a letter handed by Mr. Basic to a flight steward, Thomas Van Dorn, shortly after the jet left La Guardia Airport. The text follows:

"1. This airplane is hijacked.

"2. We are in possession of five gelignite bombs, four of which are set in cast iron pens, giving them the same kind of force as a giant grenade.

"3. In addition, we have left the same type of bomb in a locker across from the Commodore Hotel on 42nd St. To find the locker, take the subway entrance by the Bowery Savings Bank. After passing through the token booth, there are three windows belonging to the bank to the left of these windows are the lockers. The number of the locker is 5713.

"4. Further instructions are contained in a letter inside this locker. The bomb can only be activated by pressing the switch to which it is attached; but caution is suggested.

"5. The appropriate authorities should be notified from the plane immediately.

"6. This plane will ultimately be heading in the direction of London, England."

Thomas R. Fadden, assistant United States Attorney and chief of the general crimes division who is prosecuting the government's case, said the grand jury handed up its indictment after hearing about six witnesses, including the plane's pilot.

A Manhattan grand jury has been convened to take evidence leading to possible murder charges against the five hijackers in connection with the death of officer Murray, a member of the Police Department's bomb section who was killed while trying to deactivate the bomb.

Mars comes to Earth

with the help of Lockheed spacecraft recorders.

The spectacular NASA photographs and secrets of the Martian soil beamed to Earth from Viking are helped along the way by Lockheed tape recorders nestled in the spacecraft.

The Lockheed recorders in the Viking Lander and Viking Orbiter enable NASA scientists to store and play back millions of bits of history-

Achieving success in space is an old story for Lockheed recorders. They have contributed to Mariner-Mars 6, 7 and 9 and Mariner-Venus-Mercury 10. They have participated in all Apollo missions. And they will be in the Jupiter-Saturn fly-by mission to be launched in 1977.

Large Group of Undecided Voters Found Looking to Debates for Aid

Study Also Shows Much of the Support for Carter and Ford Is Subject to Quick Change

By ROBERT REINHOLD

The polls show that an unusually large number of voters cannot make up their minds whether they prefer Gerald Ford or Jimmy Carter for President, and Eileen Hayes is one of them.

"Ford has done nothing, but Carter has just come up in the past year—who knows anything about him?" said Mrs. Hayes, a housewife in Levittown, N.Y., in a fairly typical reply. "The debates might help me decide."

With surveys showing the Presidential race narrowing, fence-sitting voters like Mrs. Hayes will be a major target of both candidates in the debates that open tomorrow night in Philadelphia. For a variety of reasons, the choice between a non-elected President and the recently elected obscure Georgian is leaving millions up in the air.

The latest New York Times-CBS News poll, taken earlier this month, found nearly 30% in five voters undecided. The Gallup poll detected somewhat fewer, but said that the proportion expressing no choice was running nearly twice the rate of comparable points in the 1968 and 1972 campaigns.

Support Is Found to Be 'Soft'

Adding to the uncertainty is the fact, shown in polls, that the support for both candidates is very "soft," and that many who are committed are likely to change their minds easily.

Who are the undecided? How do they differ from other voters? What are their concerns?

An examination of the hundreds who voted in the Times-CBS poll they still had no preference suggests they are somewhat more likely than the average voter to be conservative, to have voted for Richard M. Nixon in 1972, to be female and to come from lower income and blue collar backgrounds. Nearly a third said their first choice in the primaries was Ronald Reagan, former Governor of California.

They are also more likely to be distrustful of government, to believe that government mainly serves the privileged, and that politicians are crooked. They further tended to be more pessimistic about their personal economic situations.

But the statistics do not say it quite so well as Alec Gibson, a 54-year-old real estate broker in Miami, a Democrat. "I don't think it makes any difference who gets in," he said. "The country is beyond the point where the President has much to do. I feel like the guy who wrote the halloo 'none of the above'."

Mr. Gibson does not say it quite so forcefully as Edward Jones, 27, a black hospital orderly who lives in the Watts section of Los Angeles and who believes neither candidate is speaking to the issues that trouble him or the persons he knows.

"The cities are rotting and Ford and Carter are talking about abortion," he said. "Conditions have never been worse in Watts and nobody cares."

These are some of the views to emerge from interviews with undecided voters in New York, Ohio, Illinois, Florida, Maryland and California. The interviews were unscientific, but they tended to confirm what the surveys demonstrate.

Mr. Ford, feeling him a known quantity, a secure and honest, if uninspiring, leader.

chaos; leadership, not the passivity of the last two years. The energy program is not insoluble if we meet it with the vision, determination and confidence that will come about only with a change of leadership.

The statement outlining the proposal was issued here today two days before the Democratic Presidential candidate's first televised debate with his Republican opponent, President Ford. Mr. Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell, said in response to questions that the debate was "not a consideration" in the timing or evolution of the proposal.

However, it was recalled that Mr. Carter had said on many occasions in the past that it was "impossible" during the heat and distractions of a political campaign to give examples of how he would proceed with governmental reorganization. He has been accused of "fuzziness" and it seemed possible that today's statement was meant, in part, to be a defense against such charges.

Resting at Home

Mr. Carter was at home today, resting from the rigors of the campaign trail, and was not available for questioning about an interview, to be published next month by Playboy magazine, in which Mr. Carter is quoted as having said that he had "looked on a lot of women with lust" and "committed adultery in my heart many times."

In the interview Mr. Carter is quoted, as having used the words "shack up," and a common if mild vulgarism for sexual intercourse to explain a personal interpretation of a Christian principle.

Mr. Powell said the remarks in the interview were an "expression" of Mr. Carter's religious views on the matter of "pride," and illustrated Mr. Carter's main point that someone who had only felt his hidden desires should not feel content ascending toward those who had committed adultery. This, Mr. Powell asserted, was a "view that most Americans find very compatible" and expressed a common view that it was wrong to judge others for lapses.

However, Mr. Powell's normally vigorous voice became so quiet during much of the questioning that he was inaudible to many of the reporters listening to him. Their nearly unanimous view was that Mr. Carter's associates were far from happy with this distracting development in the campaign.

The Carter statement on energy argued that the first step to a coherent policy

Carter Surprises Ohio Politicians By His Show of Strength in State

By R. W. APPLE

MANSFIELD, Ohio, Sept. 21—The 1976 Presidential contest is disrupting political patterns of 30 years' standing, and there is no better evidence of the changes than in the industrial states clustered around the Great Lakes.

For decades, it has been safe to assume that Illinois and Michigan would tend toward the Democrats and Indiana and Ohio would tend toward the Republicans. But this year, at least after two weeks of inconclusive and rather drab campaigning, the situation appears to be reversed.

President Ford leads in Michigan, his home state, and in Illinois, according to polls taken by his organization and by that of his Democratic opponent, Jimmy Carter. Similar polls in Indiana show the two almost even, and in Ohio, to the astonishment of local politicians, Mr. Carter holds a solid lead.

Ohio is the state that has broken many a Democrat's heart, most memorably that of John F. Kennedy, who commented after the 1960 election that Ohioans come out to cheer him and then voted for Richard M. Nixon. It is a state with a tradition of Republican governors. It is a state with 15 Republican representatives out of 23—the highest proportion of any big state.

No Democratic Presidential candidate who was not an incumbent has carried Ohio since Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932.

Ford Found in Trouble in Ohio

Yet as the state's top Democrats rode across the north-central part of the state on the Democratic whistle-stop train this morning, and as the state's leading Republicans assembled in Columbus this afternoon for their state convention, the common assumption was that Mr. Ford was in trouble in Ohio.

A poll taken for Mr. Carter by Patrick Caddell, and confirmed in the main, by the Republican-financed surveys of Robert Teeter, provides a clue to the altered shape of electoral sentiment in the state.

It showed the Georgian 6 percentage points ahead statewide, but leading only narrowly in Cuyahoga County (Cleveland), the state's Democratic bastion. Ordinarily, Democrats must win there by large margins to survive, but Mr. Carter is apparently not viewed by Ohio voters as an ordinary Democrat.

While his views on abortion and his background as a Southern Baptist are seemingly costing him some support among voters of Eastern European extraction in the "cosmo" wards of Cleveland and in such ethnic enclaves as Parma, he is showing remarkable strength in downstate Republican areas.

Carter Support Held Surprising

John McDonald, the Democratic challenger to Representative John Ashbrook in a heavily conservative eight-county district that stretches from Newwalk in the north through Mansfield to Newark in the south, said that he had been dumbfounded by Mr. Carter's support as he made the rounds of county fairs this month.

"People who have spent their lives going right down the Republican ticket come up to me and ask for Carter bumper stickers or Carter literature," Mr. McDonald reported. "He reaches these rural people the way John Glenn did in 1974."

Mr. Glenn carried all 89 counties in the state two years ago in winning election to the Senate—an unparalleled feat for a Democratic candidate.

Paul Tipps, the Democratic state chair-

Daley Welcomes Mondale at End Of Whistle-Stopping Train Trip

By LINDA CHARLTON

CHICAGO, Sept. 21—The Democratic train for a change ended its 28-hour whistle-stop journey from New York City tonight with Mayor Richard J. Daley cheering crowds of the party faithful greeting Senator Walter F. Mondale as he arrived.

The train arrived at Chicago's Union Station on time and Mayor Daley boarded the rear observation car in which the Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee, his wife and Rosalynn Carter, the wife of the Presidential nominee, had ridden since this morning.

Speaking to the crowd in the station a few minutes later, Mayor Daley said that the arrival of the train "brings back tonight the spirit of the great victory of 1948," alluding to the upset scored in that Presidential election by President Truman, who whistle-stopped throughout the nation.

The ghost of Harry S. Truman was a pervasive and lively presence as the shiny 13-car train wound its way along the 465-mile route from Pittsburgh to Chicago, across northern Ohio and Indiana. Mr. Mondale told the crowd that he had ridden the famous 1948 Whistlestop that carried Mr. Truman to victory when "they [the voters] decided to keep a President in the White House."

He added, "I get the same feeling that I did then—you're about to elect a people's President."

There was little new in Mr. Mondale's short speeches today. He contrasted Mr. Carter's campaign of "talking with the people" with Mr. Ford, the appointed President of the United States, hiding behind his desk in Washington.

He used again the joke that was a crowd pleaser in Binghamton, N.Y., yesterday, referring to a photograph of President Ford with a cow that appeared in a local paper and saying, "Now we know where he's getting his advice. We're getting ours from the people."

Mr. Mondale talked about rising unemployment and other bread-and-butter issues that he has made the base for much of his campaigning.

"If you want the rich to have the privilege of starting to pay taxes along with the working people, don't put a Republican in the White House," he cried. "Get yourself a Jimmy Carter Democrat."

But always he came back to Mr. Truman, declaring that Mr. Carter and Mr. Truman "both stayed with the people" and choosing a long Truman quotation to wind up his speech. Reading it from a sheet of paper, as he has done to conclude speeches all around the country, he read Mr. Truman's description of Republicans as "strong for labor not stronger for restraints on labor's rights," and as supporters of the minimum wage "the more minimum the better"—and

Western Democratic Chiefs Tell Carter Not to Ignore the Area

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN

TETON VILLAGE, Wyo., Sept. 21—Gov. Calvin Rampton of Utah came to the annual meeting of the Western Governors' Conference here this week with a 15-pound bronze cast in Salt Lake City.

He was planning to give it to Jimmy Carter if the Democratic Presidential candidate showed up. But Mr. Carter did not, and Rampton aide presented the gift to a Carter deputy campaign manager.

The incident suggests a problem Mr. Carter faces in the 13 Western states, all except two of which have Democratic governors. Of the nine with voter registration by party, Democrats hold the edge in eight. Yet, despite national polls showing Mr. Carter ahead of President Ford in the region, the Georgian could be in serious trouble in the West.

"I'm not kidding myself. This is a low priority region," said Joe McCarter, an Idaho rancher who is the Carter campaign coordinator for four northern intermountain states. "We've got to convince these people we're not writing them off."

The feeling of some Democratic campaign officials is that the region's Democratic members gathered in this idyllic western Grand Teton National Park was that Mr. Carter needed to make a more intensive effort if he expected to capture such states as Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Washington and Arizona in November.

Carter Active in California

A big push by Mr. Carter in California, which has 45 electoral votes compared with 57 for the rest of the Western states combined, is already under way. The candidate also appeared recently in Arizona and is expected to visit Oregon soon.

But other states are waiting, a bit impatiently in some cases, for a show of interest by the Democratic contender.

Mr. McCarter said that Utah, Idaho and

The Democratic General Store after its opening yesterday in

Democrats Open a 'General'

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21—The Democratic National Committee began selling peanuts today to raise money for the party's election campaign.

Peanuts—in shells, in cookies, in soup, in pudding with jelly, in a dispenser resembling the White House, on neckties, ties and tee shirts and smiling on campaign buttons and bumper stickers—were among a variety of goods that could be had at today's opening of the "Democratic General Store" in Georgetown.

But the peanuts—in at least those in shells—are not genuine Georgia peanuts from Plains. They're from Virginia.

The unmistakably partisan bric-a-brac shop looks like a general store, but once inside, customers will find that the enterprise has an altogether different purpose than simply selling souvenirs.

According to its manager, Toni Peabody, the store is not so much a place where supporters can convert a cash donation into a jar of marmalade or a bar of soap as it is a spot where ad accepted the presidency of the school, which has a conservative reputation. Dr. Bennington wanted a challenge. "I was a conventional arts college, I wouldn't be here," he said. "But I am an active institution. The faculty reputation well. It's been a leader in innovation."

Dr. Bennington functioned largely as a "figurehead" looking for a successor. "I'm looking for someone who can lead the mind over the matter."

Dr. Bennington, 68, is generally considered to have improved the college since he took over in 1972. He was a former Harvard University professor. The school, which has a low faculty-student ratio, has a reputation for strong scribed his reception as "warm." Dr. Parker's lasagna has come under attack in one, bizarre incident, and Dr. Murphy was asked, in an interview, about his wife, Peggy's, skill with the dish. "She's a great French cook," he deadpanned.

Merrill Hambleton of New York, president of the board of trustees, added, "And there will be no banana cake." One of the more absurd complaints about Dr. Parker was that she failed to sufficiently defend her Sara Lee banana cake before serving it.

Dr. Murphy said that some of his friends, when informed of his new job, shook their heads and said, "Joe, Joe, you're crazy." But, he noted cheerfully, they were the same friends who had said he was crazy when he left a teaching job at Brandeis to take a job with the Peace Corps in the Virgin Islands, when he left the Virgin Islands for a job with the Department of Health Education and Welfare in Washington and when he left Washington to take another Peace Corps post in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

Dr. Murphy's salary as president of Queens College, which has 29,000 students, was about $48,000. Dr. Parker was hired in 1972 at $22,500. "I don't think my salary [at Bennington] is relevant," said Dr. Murphy. "The salary is only a partial consideration. At least I won't be obliged to sell the president's house there."

Motive Explained

Dr. Murphy said that when he was asked to meet with Bennington's presidential search committee, his first reaction was "curiosity."

"I have roots in Queens," he said, "and a profound regard for the place. But Peggy and I are peripatetic people. We like opportunities to grow and to take on new challenges."

Mrs. Hambleton said the selection of Dr. Murphy had been agreed upon unanimously both by the search committee and the board of trustees.

Dr. Parker, who is now working at freelance writing in Chicago, said she wished Dr. Murphy the best of luck. "All my friends told me I was crazy to take the job four years ago," she noted. "I would not presume to give him any advice. I understand he's a good administrator and I hope he has a reasonably good, productive time there."

Dr. Parker expressed no bitterness over her experience at Bennington, but did say, "It was extremely hurt to think they didn't like my lasagna and I don't even remember serving banana cake. It will help to have a wife."

womanhood. The feeling of humor, spontaneous ease and informed idon-ence that has characterized the film to that point vanishes, to be replaced by what sounds like testimony given at a consciousness raising seminar.

Until this point, "Femmes au Soleil" is, as the festival program describes it, "Rohmeresque," at least to the extent that it recalls the mood and the wit of Eric Rohmer's "Claire's Knee," which was also superbly photog-raphed by Nestor Almendros, Juliette Mayniel, Genevieve Fontanel and Nathalie Chantrel are fine as the unhappy women, though I think Miss Dreyfus ultimately shortchanges them.

Norton, Tuning Up for Ali, Disables a 2d Sparring Mate

If Ken Norton is as successful against Muhammad Ali in their world heavy-weight title fight next Tuesday night as he has been in training against his sparring partners, he might become the new champion.

Norton is now down to two partners because of his heavy training at Grossinger's in the Catskills. Jody Ballard of Houston was the latest casualty. "He has severely bruised ribs and may have a fracture," said Bill Slayton, Norton's trainer. He added, "Jody's finished. He won't be able to work anymore."

The Norton camp also lost the services of Fred (Young Sanford) Houpe, who had to leave camp with a badly cut lip. Slayton said, "We only plan on boxing another two or three days. Ken can't hold back with these guys. It's unfortunate these injuries occurred, but that's the nature of the business."

Victor Galindez of Argentina, the World Boxing Association light-heavyweight champion, arrived in Johannesburg to prepare for his title match against the South African champion, Rosie Smith. Smith greeted Galindez at Jan Smuts airport and said, "I want his title and I'm going to take it." Galindez, scorned suggestions about Smith's punching power. "I have had a lot of professional fights against the hardest-hitting light-heavyweight men in the world, and I have never been stopped. Smith's power does not worry me."

Rene Muth Portland, who played on three national championship women's basketball team, at Immaculata College, a suburb of Philadelphia, has been named coach of the women's team at rival St. Joseph's. Mrs. Portland was co-captain of Immaculata when the Mighty Macs were runners-up in the 1975 national championships after they had won the title in 1972, '73 and '74. She was inducted in the Hall of Fame in 1974.

Jose Morales of the Montreal Expos, who set a major league season record for pinch hits with his 25th of the year last Thursday, has been named the National League's player of the week. . . . George Scott, the first baseman of the Milwaukee Brewers, earned American League honors for his 500 batting mark during the week of Sept. 13-15. Scott had 14 hits and eight runs batted in for 28 appearances at the plate.

Leamon Hall of Army and Joe Agee of Eastern College Athletic Conference football players of the week in Division I. Hall helped Army to a 26-24 victory over Holy Cross after the Cadets had trailed, 24-6, in the fourth quarter. His passing performance, 19 completions of 36 attempts for 281 yards, gave him the offensive player award.

Agee, a junior from Williamsburg, Va., was named defensive player as his team beat Virginia, 14-0. Agee made four unassisted tackles and assisted on seven others. He deflected four passes and intercepted one, caused one fumble and recovered another.

Doug MacFarlane was instructing his University of Idaho golf class as he stepped to the 11th tee at the campus course in Moscow, Idaho.

"This is the way you do it," he said, whereupon MacFarlane sank a hole-in-one, his first ace, on the 145-yard hole.

Bruce Jenner, the decathlon gold medalist at Montreal's Olympic Games, will be the guest of honor at Newtown High School in Connecticut Friday night. Jenner, a 1968 graduate of Newtown, will have the school's stadium named after him. Bob Mathias, the 1948 and 1952 Olympic decathlon champion, will be the guest speaker.

Patriots' Upset of Dolphins Fails to Alter Week's Odds

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

The most startling score of the National Football League's new season, New England's 30-14 rout of Miami last Sunday, failed to impress those who determine the next weekend's favorites; the outcome was regarded as an isolated phenomenon typical of the sport. Releasing its wagering line yesterday from Reno, Nev., Football for Sunday's games, Harrah's Racebook decided the Dolphins were 19-point favorites over the Jets and the Patriots 15-point underdogs to the Pittsburgh Steelers. There was no downgrading of Miami and no upgrading of New England.

The Patriots' style has been to play one good game in about four, but their performance against Miami gives pause. Led by Sam Cunningham, the battering fullback, the offense gained 278 yards rushing. That was the highest total any team has run up on a Dolphin defense coached by Don Shula over the last seven seasons.

Furthermore the New England defense, which gave up 25 points a game last season in contributing to 11 defeats, held Norm Eshbach to 9 yards in five rushes; Don Nottingham to 10 in seven, and sacked Bob Griese five times.

Miami, impressive in its opening victory over Buffalo, also has lost one of its three cornerbacks, Tim Foley, to knee surgery. But Shula's teams have a record of bouncing back and only once in the last five years have the Dolphins lost two games in a row. Heaven help the Jets.

Apart from Foley, other out-of-the-season losses from Sunday's games were Doug Buffone, the Bears' top linebacker; Gary Garrison, the Chargers' seasoned receiver; and Herb Orvis, the Lions' best defensive lineman.

The Lions play Minnesota next, and Rick Forzano, the Detroit coach, is uncomfortable. Before the Atlanta game, the owner, Bill Ford, decided he would discharge Forzano and Russ Thomas, the general manager who started with the team as a player in 1946, if the team did not win. It did, 24-10.

"There's pressure and I don't like it," said Forzano. "But there's nothing I can do about it. I told my players,

"If any of you ever decide you want to be a coach, go out, get drunk and forget it."

The national television game late Sunday will be Baltimore at Dallas. The Cowboys have outscored their opponents, 51-13, in two games and Tom Landry, the coach, says the offense is rolling because of the effectiveness of Roger Staubach's passing from the spread formation. "We've learned how to use it," he said, "and the receivers are getting open."

Hank Stram's Saints lost to both Minnesota and Dallas, and Stram thinks Dallas has the better team. "The Cowboys come at you in so many ways," he said, "with so much variety."

The Tampa Bay expansion team has yet to score a point and enthusiasm for the Buccaneers has tumbled. Only 38,558 turned out for the regular-season home opener, with almost 6,000 no-shows.

Gloating Dick Vermeil, the Eagles' coach, said his owner, Leonard Rose, guaranteed him $1.5 million to sign Larry Coonka last spring if he won but Vermeil passed. After the Eagles beat the Giants and checked Coonka, Vermeil said, "I question the loyalty of a player who sells his services for $1.5 million. He'll make his money, playing three years, and bail out. I believe you win with character players like Vince Papale."

Papale is the 30-year-old rookie Eagle receiver who went to a college without a football team. St. Joseph's, then played the game for a touch team on local sandlots before winning a job with the Philadelphia Bell of the defunct World Football League.

Comeback of Chiefs Saves Coach From Nightmare of College Rout

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 21 (AP) — in Paul Wiggin's college days at Stanford, his team once lost 72-0. That nightmare was all he could think of as his humiliated Kansas City Chiefs trudged into the locker room at halftime last night.

The Oakland Raiders, picked again this year as a prime Super Bowl candidate, were en route to what looked like a rout. Lacking in offense, the harassed Chiefs had two first downs and 37 yards. The Raiders had a 17-0 lead and 283 yards.

Wiggin drew no X's or O's on a blackboard. "At halftime, we said to them that nothing we were doing would work," said the Chiefs' second-year coach, "it was just the manner in which we were doing them. We made no adjustments in the second half."

The players talked among themselves, quietly and bitterly, said Mike Livingston, the quarterback. "We were asking each other, 'Are we going to accept this, or are we going to pull something up from deep within our souls,'" he said.

In the second half, after millions of fans had probably stopped watching the game on television, the Chiefs outplayed the Raiders. It was too late to win the game, and Oakland finally prevailed, 24-21.

"I'm sick because we lost," said Wiggin, adding that the Chiefs had left the field feeling more like winners than losers. "But there's not a man among us whose head is bowed. I think we grew a little bit in that second half."

Oakland's quarterback, Ken Stabler, stole the show in the first half. Before leaving with a strained knee early in the fourth quarter, he completed 22 of 28 passes, including three for touchdowns.

"Stabler was as sharp as I've ever seen a quarterback be," Wiggin said. "But I'm just as proud of our players."

Rarely does a team win and lose at the same time. But it may have happened at Arrowhead Stadium last night.

Bick Lost to U.S. Cup Team

By ALEX YANNIS

With its opening game for the World Cup only two days away, the United States squad has encountered several problems. Besides the unavailability of a goal-scorer at this point, Sam Bick, one of the key men on defense, will not play against Canada in Vancouver on Friday night because of stretched ligaments in his left ankle, the coach said yesterday.

In other developments yesterday and late on Monday, Eddie Firmani of the Tampa Bay Rowdies signed a two-year contract as head coach, while John Best, the coach of the Seattle Sounders, resigned and was replaced by Jim Gabriel, who was Best's assistant. Firmani was voted coach of the year in the North American Soccer League, while Best, who took the Sounders to the playoffs, is still with the team, but his eyes are on a general manager's job. The Rowdies have also signed Gordon Hill, the top referee in the league, who will work with youth programs in the Tampa Bay area.

"We will compensate by making adjustments on defense," Walt Chyzowych, the coach of the unit that hopes to bring soccer prominence to this country, said by phone from Seattle. "Bick's absence will hurt us, but the big problem is our lack of scoring." As of late Monday night, Chyzowych, who gathered the squad in Colorado a month ago, had only six or seven positions filled for the game against Canada. The coach spent part of his time yesterday calling Belgium, trying to get Julie Veece, an American who plays in the First Division in Belgium, to join the squad.

"Julie can definitely solve part of the problem on offense," Chyzowych said of the forward from the San Jose Earthquakes of the N.A.S.L. "If Julie does not join us, it seems that Boris Bandov will be our main offensive threat."

The team went on a tour of South America, playing in Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela without posting a victory. The Canadians, in the meantime, defeated the New York Cosmos, 3-1, in one of the preparation games. Scoring three goals against the Cosmos is no small feat for any team. The Americans played well in most of their games in South America, but the lack of scoring was evident.

"We created scoring opportunities in several of our games, it's just that we were unable to finish them," Chyzowych said. "I still have plenty of talent on this team. I will take 22 players to Vancouver and I think it's going to be a hell of a war," he said. The team will leave Seattle for Vancouver late this evening for the game on Friday night.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 21 (AP)—Dick Allen's double with two out in the fourth inning triggered a three-run burst and the Philadelphia Phillies went on to beat the St. Louis Cardinals, 5-1, tonight and increase their lead in the National League's Eastern Division to five games.

The Phillies picked up a half-game on second-place Pittsburgh, which split an afternoon doubleheader with the Chicago Cubs.

Allen doubled, Mike Schmidt walked and Johnny Oates singled for the Phil's first run in 13 innings, with Schmidt advancing to third, Schmidt and Oates went home when Tommy Underwood's chopper bounced off Hector Cruz's glove for an error at third base.

Giants Shown Game Films; Csonka Is Ill

By MICHAEL KATZ

PLEASANTVILLE, N. Y., Sept. 21—The Giants reported back to work today, watched the films of their 20-7 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles and Larry Csonka became ill.

It was not the effect Coach Bill Arnsparger intended when, for the first time in his three years with the Giants, he showed game films to the squad en masse, not divided into offensive and defensive groups.

Csonka will be ready for the game with the Rams at Los Angeles next Sunday. But before Arnsparger prepares his strategy for stopping the first of five consecutive powerhouse teams on the schedule, he is attempting to get his own players going again after two straight losses.

The emphasis, said Jack Gregory, the defensive captain who had never before seen offensive films, was on the positive. "It accomplished what he set out to do," said the defensive end.

THE SONY VISION. By Nick Lyons, 235 pages, illustrated, Crown, $7.95.

It's too bad Nick Lyons' "The Sony Vision" ultimately reads like a piece of company-sponsored promotion, because it isn't, and what's more, there is so much about the subject that is intrinsically appealing. To begin with, there's the Sony product itself, which happens to love in all its forms, from pocket transistor radio to Trinitron color television, for its design, its workmanship, its intricacy, and the sense it gives me that I am at the controls of my little corner of technology. (Amazing, when you consider how short, a time ago the label "Made in Japan" was synonymous with junk.) If Sony's future success depends in part on the company's persuading people that they need its new Betamax video tape recorder, the machine with which you can record television shows and play them back at your leisure, then I'm optimistic for Sony. I know I badly need a Sony Betamax, though I can't imagine just why.

The Betamax video cassette console model for the American market.

Second, Sony's corporate history is an interesting one, at least to judge from Mr. Lyons' account of it. Known first as Tokyo Telecommunications and only later named Sony—from the Latin "sonus," for sound—the company was started in 1945 in a burnt-out office building in Tokyo by two electrical engineers, Akio Morita and Masaru Ibuka, who knew only that they wanted "to do something that no other company had done before." (At first, they considered manufacturing miniature golf equipment, and even went so far as to design and construct an automatic rice cooker that never caught on.)

"Vision" ends up sounding like a put-up job. It isn't really. As he explains in a prologue, Mr. Lyons wrote the book to understand how a successful corporation develops; his publisher funded the project; Sony cooperated, but with no strings attached. And there's little reason to doubt him, if only because, as a trout fisherman and the author of three books about fishing, he simply has to be a man of discrimination and taste.

Adulatory and Superficial
 Still, the fact remains that he has nothing at all to say of a critical nature about Sony (except at the very end, when he merely raises the question whether Sony's plans to aid pre-industrial leaders in the education of "developing peoples" isn't a "prelude to 1984"). He is imprecise and superficial when it comes to describing Sony's most dramatic technological developments—particularly of the high-frequency transistor that made "pocketable" radios possible and of the Trinitron color system that was the first major alternative to RCA's shadow-mask principle—which makes it seem as if he had worked from company press releases. And his descriptions of Akio Morita are so adulatory and lacking substance—"Morita today is at home in almost every corner of the world; with scores of different tasks and commitments and people"—that Sony's co-founder and most visible eminence sounds more like the fantasy of an annual report writer than a human being.

The net effect of all this puffery was to make me want to recall every negative thing I have ever heard about Sony—such as the high cost of repairing their wonderful machines, and their refusal once to honor a warranty because the broken item was brought in one day after that warranty had expired. Worse, Mr. Lyons' unmitigated adulation made even the best things about Sony seem ambiguous. So its aim is "to give the public a way of seeing its unrecognized and unfulfilled needs?" Well, what about our unnecessary needs? Is it responsible for those too? So Sony's the son-of-a-gun to blame for all our indiscriminate and unfixed yearnings! Betamax video tape recorders indeed!

Nine Major Oil Companies Forming Cooperative to Clean Up Spills on New York-New Jersey Water

By DAVID F. WHITE
Special to The New York Times

LINDEN, N.J., Sept. 21—A group of nine major oil companies with refining and marketing facilities on the New York-New Jersey waterfront plan to form a mutual aid cooperative that would clean up major oil spills in the harbor.

The plan, disclosed today by the New Jersey Petroleum Council, is aimed at providing "immediate response" to major oil spills such as the accidental dumping of 2.5 million gallons from the Patchogue Oil Terminal Corporation into the Gowanus Canal on Jan. 3, since called the largest contained oil-on-water spill in the nation's history, and the loss of 100,000 gallons from a Wellen Oil Company tank in Jersey City on May 26.

"All of the companies in the cooperative, and some not in the cooperative, agree that New York harbor needs to be protected against major oil spills," said W. C. Taetzsch of the Exxon Company, U.S.A., who has been assigned to direct preliminary planning for the new group, to be called the Clean Harbors Cooperative.

Two mutual aid groups, whose members jointly own oil-spill control equipment and act together in the event of spills, have been operating in the Arthur Kill and the Kill Van Kull-Newark Bay areas of the harbor for several years.

But Mr. Taetzsch said that an industry study had determined that the existing mutual aid groups did not have the capability to deal with serious spills of 30,000 barrels or more.

"The mutual aid groups were set up for relatively minor problems," he said. The new unit would determine what spill control equipment—such as containment booms and deployment vessels—exists now at oil companies around the harbor, organize this equipment into a force that can be called out quickly and controlled effectively, and acquire additional spill control equipment not currently available.

Besides Exxon, the members of the planned cooperative are the Chevron Oil Company, the Shell Oil Company, the Gulf Oil Company-U.S., Texaco Inc., the Mobil Oil Corporation, the Sun Oil Company, the Amstar Hess Corporation and the Bp Oil Corporation.

Top priorities for the new group, according to Michael C. Zvirbla of the Shell Oil Company, who has been assigned to take up the position of manager of the Clean Harbors Cooperative beginning Nov. 1, will be the development of a capability to lighten off as much as 200,000 barrels of oil from vessels in distress, the acquisition if necessary of major spill control equipment such as skimmers, and the creation of a contingency plan to guide member companies in acting quickly to contain and clean up oil spills.

"We'd like to eliminate as much of the "what do I do now?" as we can," said Mr. Zvirbla, adding that an important part of the group's operations would be the assembling of marine, legal and other technical experts.

Companies that do not belong to the cooperative, which is expected to be operative within a year or two, would be able to request that any equipment owned by the group be borrowed, he said. Such requests would be reviewed by a three-man committee.

Emergency Operations

According to Mr. Taetzsch, the oil companies involved in the project believe that such an agency might reduce the cost of oil spill cleanups by insuring that the job was completed promptly. Contractors already employed by the group would be called upon for any equipment acquired.

The Coast Guard, which has authority for insuring that the new unit operates as well as it can, said Lieut. Malcolm Pollock, Coast Guard Pollution Control Officer, "The more people crank the more eyes watching the better," said Lieut. Malcolm Pollock, Coast Guard Pollution Control Officer, "You need the to get into this area, it seems private to my mind for them selves if they can."

Generalized Views Changing Mormon Haven

LAKE CITY, Sept. 20 — Let Virtue by Thoughts... proclaimed a placard by an earnest young man outside a spring X-rated films in downtown Salt Lake City.

"We recognize that the forces of evil are directing themselves at the family and young people," remarked Ezra Taft Benson, former Agriculture Secretary in the Eisenhower Cabinet and now president of the Council of 12 Apostles of the Mormon Church, which establishes him as the next in line to lead the church and its claimed world membership of 3.7 million.

The 'Other' Brooklyn Bridge: Spacious Offices and Labyrinthine Caves

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

Ever since the first greenhorn bought a share in the Brooklyn Bridge, it has become common lore that the bridge is not for sale. It is, however, for rent.

how many of the arches on the Brooklyn and Manhattan sides can be rented. Most of the arches—stone and brick vaults—are used by the city's Department of Public Works. Some 70 men report to work daily in spacious, well-lit offices in Arches 12 through 29 on the Manhattan side.

Tha arches for rent, at $300 a month, are usually three stories high, with sub-basements, few utilities, no heat, constant seepage and monotonous rattling from the cars on the bridge above.

and goatskins in barrels of brine in Arches 10 and 11, and the newly established Brooklyn Bridge Craft Works, a non-profit organization, which leased Arch 9 last June and may open next spring—if the group can raise $50,000 to renovate the arch.

In a high-vaulted corner of this domed room, where the brick had been painted a sky blue, stood a platform with tables where merchants came to taste the wine, Mr. Kirk said.

The New York Times/Charles Heston Jr. and D. Gordon

In the 93 years since the Brooklyn Bridge was opened, its arches, on land, have been used for various purposes, including the storage of wine, as above.

Just how many other arches are available for rent the Department of Real Estate cannot say. A spokesman for the department said yesterday that he knew for certain that two arches could be rented, but "we don't know what we have."

These are the wine cellars, meandering caves of red brick and gray stone set in a series of arches at North William Street, across the street from Face University.

Inside the caverns, where footsteps and voices echo, the walls glisten with moisture. The small winding rooms all seem to open onto one great ball that conjures up visions of feasts in the courts of Renaissance kings.

Nearly, in what Mr. Kirk calls "The Blue Grotto," is an empty niche set into the brick. It seems to have been placed over a 12-foot-high altar, and according to legend, contained a Madonna robed in blue, which glowed in the dark.

Last year, the Mayor's Office sought a $25,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts to conduct a feasibility study of the area. It was turned down this year, a staff member said.

But businessmen come forward on a fairly regular basis to inquire about rentals. Often, said William Sokolov, who runs one of the largest wine stores in the country at 178 Madison Avenue, citizens are met with "double talk."

A top-level committee to review city park concession agreements to increase revenues was announced jointly by Mayor Beame and Comptroller Harrison J. ## Proposed Changes for Services Opposed by Community Groups —2 Areas Would Be Cut

By GLENN FOWLER

Residents of Queens turned out in force yesterday to protest proposed new boundaries for police, sanitation and other municipal services as mandated by the revised New York City Charter.

Further Cut First Proposed

The implementation group's subcommittee on coterminality had proposed early last summer that the number of districts in Queens be cut to 11, but subsequent discussions with community leaders convinced city officials to propose eliminating only two districts in what is physically the largest of the five boroughs and the second-largest in population, with nearly 2 million residents.

Police Asking for Some Horses They Needn't Look in the Mouth

Twelve-year-old hay horses are No. 1 on the Most Wanted List of the mounted unit of the New York City Police Department. Nearly 1,000 copies of a composite sketch of the type of horse being sought by the department have been circulated in restaurants, stadiums and horse lovers' hangouts throughout the city.

WANTED

One was stolen on the first day and another was taken last night by a restaurant owner from Philadelphia who is a horse lover, said Mr. Sardi.

Unless we seek help now, the mounted police unit may one day be decimated.

Designer + Store + City = Quite a Party

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Carter Bacot, the banker, and his wife, Shirley

Beth Vagliano and Nina Hunter in strapless styles

As the plane from Miami circled New York, the pilot called attention to certain points of interest, such as the Statue of Liberty.

"I don't care about the Statue of Liberty—I want to see Bloomingdale's," a flight attendant called out.

Roz Gersten, who tells the story, observed that nobody points out Burdine's when a plane circles over Miami. Her husband, Melvin Jacobs, is chairman of the Miami store.

Bloomingdale's has acquired a certain mythic stature, becoming almost a code word for all that is chic and with-it about New York, as has Halston, who has of course achieved his own mythic status in the fashion world.

Put the two institutions together and what do you have?

Quite a blast.

Bloomingdale's provided the place. Halston supplied the clothes—his resort collection, which was introduced last week on Seventh Avenue to store buyers.

New York supplied the theme—and the charity.

For $100, fans of Bloomingdale's, Halston and the city were invited to the store to drink champagne and look at clothes—the ones on the runway designed by Halston as well as the ones on the other guests standing around. For $1,000 each they could buy a table or for $2,500 become a patron and be known as "Big Apples."

Gotham in Business Suit. About 600 people turned up. Bankers and fashion designers, builders and playboys, all professing undying affection for the Big Apple.

"Nobody told me it was black tie," Victor Gottbaum, the labor leader, lamented to Felix J. Rohatyn, the financier. He wore a business suit, but nobody cared.

"I came here in 1950 with $12," said Kenneth Battelle, the hairdresser. "I can't say I'm a millionaire, but the city has been good to me."

There were acres of Halston dresses, particularly strapless ones and those with the asymmetric V neckline that has become his signature.

"It's a Halston party—we thought we had to wear them," Jean Tailer remarked. D. D. Ryan, on the other hand, who came with Angelo Donghia, the decorator, wore an Oriental dress of her own design ("I've been on my own Eastern trip for a long time"), and Diana Vreeland, who came with Calvin Klein, wore a purple tunic and pants outfit by Greta.

Halston provided a little extra diversion in the swimsuit-portfolio of his show: Model Karen Bjornson let out a primal scream—she was supposed to be drowning, and Pat Ast, whose figure can comfortably be described as ample, attracted attention from those who crowded around the runway as she walked down in a dress decorated with a big apple.

After an hour or so, everybody proceeded up the moving stairway from the seventh floor (linens, bedding) to the eighth (casual furniture), now transformed into what the Bloomingdale's people call the Skyline restaurant.

Some 60 tables, each seating 10, were covered with Halston sheets, serving as tablecloths. More Halston sheets were deployed as draperies, masking partitions and other department store décor that couldn't be swept away after the store closed for business at 6 P.M.

James Goslee of the Fernery supplied the centerpiece: 10 apples, each plied the centerpiece: free-form arrangements of 10 apples, one for each guest.

The Big Apple, of course. It ties in with the Big Apple campaign of the Mayor's Committee in the Public Interest, assigned to boost New York not only at home but throughout the country as well. Lots of important people on the committee, of course, including Marvin Traub, the head of Bloomingdale's. That's how things get done.

The committee members, all volunteers, will have a little money to play around with, explained Carl Spielvogel, the chairman.

About $40,000 Bloomingdale's estimates. Expenses were paid partly by the store, the rest by Halston's licensees.

"The Queen of England did the right thing by visiting Bloomingdale's," observed Mayor Beame. Obviously, he approved of the enterprise.

So did a lot of other people. Diane Von Furstenberg bought a table for 10; other Seventh Avenue luminaries who paid homage to the city, the store and a fellow designer included Giorgio Sant'Angelo and Albert Capraro.

Women whose charities usually involve diseases or hospitals contributed generously to the municipal event. Andy Warhol bought six tickets. Betsy Pickering sold a table's worth to her friends.

An Expatriate Booster. Halston himself, who was born in Des Moines and grew up in other places in the Middle West, describes himself as "New York's biggest local booster."

He's lived here 18 years, he says, "and it's hard for me to even go away for a holiday—it's even hard to go away for a weekend."

He loves his house, he can walk to work and he can find "the best of everything here—the best dance, the best art." He paused a minute and then continued, "And some of the worst too, but you don't have to pay attention to that."

There was plenty of time to compare notes on the best and the worst during the dinner of cream of water-cress soup, roast duck and apple tart, catered by Donald Bruce White, and the dancing to music by Peter Duchin on the floor cleared of merchandise.

Despite the first flurry of party preparation, customers kept buying. "It was the most extraordinary thing—today we had an increase in sales over last year," Mr. Traub remarked.

L'Chayim!

Three generations of good wishes for the holidays. Things change over the years. Cars get faster. Buildings get taller. Children grow up and have children of their own. But some things, like the traditions of Rosh Hashonah, remain the same from generation to generation.

It's a time to get together with family and friends. To reflect on the past and share hopes for the future.

So, once again, the Waldbaum family extends their warmest wishes to you and your family for peace, health, happiness and love in the coming year.

Psst! Want a Saint Laurent (Well, Almost) Che...

Step right up folks. Get them while they're hot. The latest Saint Laurent copies, direct from Paris. Complete down to the last pair of high heel boots. See the challis shawl, just the way it was shown in the haute couture salons in France. See the fur hat, Step right up.

Ohrbach's, which has hustled Paris couture copies longer than most, skipped the spring season, but is back with a bang with the haute-peasant or Russia-before-the-revolution look for fall.

There they are, the braid-edged coats, the corselet belts, the swiny taffeta skirts, just as if they marched down the runway in Paris. Only the prices have changed.

Instead of $2,000 to $10,000, the tags read only a few hundred or so. And watch closely. Some are cheaper still. They're the "adaptations"—not exact copies—and they're practically budget-priced.

How about a long ruffled taffeta skirt for $86? Or one with a velvet border for $39? Or a peasant blouse that goes with either of them for $27?

If it's authenticity you're after—same fabrics that were used in Paris—you pay a little more. For a braid-edged coat, $210; a braid-edged blue tweed jacket, a black skirt and a blue silk blouse, $275. Add $9.99 for the corselet belt.

A Touch of Glamour

How about glamour? Consider the gold lamé dress with the pleated skirt. Not exactly what you'd expect a peasant to wear in the fields. But who knows?

And now, is it an anachronism, fashions from another era that have nothing to do with life today?

The answer is an unequivocal no. A little bit of fantasy is fun. Clothes don't always have to be dead-pan serious. The braid-edged coat is a joy.

For anyone who is not convinced, there are some other goodies by other designers not on a fantasy kick. A mink-lined short coat by Ricci ($750). A cashmere double-breasted white coat by Dior ($179). A whole bunch of things by Givenchy, including a fringed wine leather coat ($270) and a lot of braid-edged suits and coats. Why, you might almost take them for Saint Laurent's in a bad light.

The experienced Ohrbach's fashion team, Sydney Gittler and Irene Satz, have picked wisely, if not as widely as in previous years. The big entertainments, with the star-studded audiences, have been eliminated. The clothes were presented simply at a press show yesterday morning. The clothes were good.

If you want to see what all the excitement in Paris was about, take a look next Monday at 10 A.M. when the clothes go on sale, dresses on the fourth floor, coats and suits on the fifth.

CONSUMER NOTES

New York Is Lacking An Advocacy Group

By FRANCES CERRA

Philadelphia has the Consumer Education and Protective Association. San Francisco has a group called Consumer Action. Cleveland has the Consumer Action Movement. And New York City? New York has no citywide, or even boroughwide, consumer group.

The city does have thousands of block associations, many civic groups, special interest organizations, such as taxpayer associations, groups whose members are organizations like labor unions, and a few entities that call themselves consumer groups but that have very few members. There is no group whose membership and leadership is made up of average citizens and whose area of interest is consumer problems.

What accounts for the absence of such a group? Some suggest the city is too big for such an organization. Others such as Donald Ross, executive director of the New York Public Interest Research Group, which is supported by college students, suggest that people have too limited an idea of the kinds of issues a consumer group can address. He believes that subjects such as the cost of government, "red-tape" by banks (their refusal to grant mortgages on any properties within certain neighborhoods) and even service on the subways can legitimately be called consumer issues.

Most Important Reason

Kay Pachtner, founder of San Francisco Consumer Action, thinks the most important reason for the lack of citizen consumer groups is the existence of government agencies that handle complaints. "People get misled into thinking someone else is taking care of their problems," she said. "But no government agency can take care of all the complaints about goods and services, especially in a city like New York where the budget of the Consumer Affairs Department has been cut back so much."

San Francisco Consumer Action, which was founded as a complaint-handling group, currently coexists with a very active District Attorney's office that also mediates complaints. The group continues to take complaints, picketing businesses when necessary, but has broadened its activities to include lobbying, research studies and publication of booklets such as a shopper's guide to area banks. Mrs. Pachtner is also considering running for public office.

Where would an individual who would like to form a consumer group in New York begin? The Consumer Federation of America's local organizing project will send to anyone, free, a copy of a case study describing how to organize such a group. The philosophy contained in the case study is that any group that hopes to become permanent should begin as a complaint-handling unit. It is by performing this service that the group attracts members. After the group becomes well established, which means getting the money for an office and most probably at least one full-time, paid staff member, legislative and other kinds of projects can be tackled.

Similar Structure

The subject of the case study is Cleveland's Consumer Action Movement, whose structure is similar to that of Philadelphia's Consumer Education and Protective Association. The hallmark of these groups is that people with complaints must participate in their resolution, rather than letting others do the work. Also, these groups will picket a business that refuses to cooperate.

A copy of the case study can be obtained by writing to the Consumer Federation of America at Suite 901, 1012 14th St., N.W., Washington, D.C., 20005. Further help in organizing is available from the New York Public Interest Research Group, according to Mr. Ross.

N.L.R.B. RULES ON WORK OF TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that employees of The New York Times Company represented by Typographical Union No. 6 are entitled to perform the work of preparing some advertising copy so that it can be handled by computer.

The board's determination, announced yesterday, was made in a case resulting from charges filed by The New York Times alleging that Local 6 had violated the Taft Hartley law by activities aimed at forcing the newspaper to continue to assign certain work to employees represented by Local 6 rather than to employees represented by Local 3 of the Newspaper Guild.

The work involved is mail copy for classified advertisements that has not been previously prepared for optical character recognition on a scanner in the news-mated typesetting system whose members "keyboard" members telephoned to the newspaper to see who should "keyboard" that does not arrive by scanner.

Local 6 said, however, that had jurisdiction of the work and was performing it. It tended also that such a dispute arbitrable under its contract that the local would strike its jurisdiction, the decision.

The board, after hearing and May, concluded that represented by Local 6 were perform the work in lieu of the employer's long-standing practice the collective bargaining of the two unions, the economy of the operations, player's preference.

Canadian Vows Supply U.S. Adequate Potash

In the 1971-75 period, which led to drop in world fertilizer consumption. Both producers and users of potash and other fertilizers, Mr. Blakeney suggested, could achieve supply-and-price stability through long-term contracts. Such agreements, he noted, would fix upper and lower price limits which could be adjusted from time to time. They would also assure more certain planning of many countries' fertilizer programs and fulfill the important responsibility of helping world food production.

Premier Blakeney made a point of asserting that under Canadian law the provinces had exclusive constitutional jurisdiction over natural resources and that their management and extraction are the business of the provincial governments. As custodian of depleting resources, he added, his government takes seriously the responsibility of getting a fair share of the value on behalf of its citizens.

Technology An Upper Stage for Space Shuttle

The space shuttle's ceremonial, tractor-drawn jaunt out of its hangar at Palmdale, Calif., received attention last week. Of possibly greater significance was a little-publicized discussion nearby, 2,000 miles away in Huntsville, Ala. At the Marshall Space Flight Center there, industry and Government space engineers discussed details of a supplementary solid-fuel rocket that would be attached to various payloads—such as communications satellites—and carried into orbit in the shuttle's 60-foot-long cargo bay.

lion. Its anticipated capacity is about 5,000 pounds to the "synchronous" altitude of 22,300 miles, and its expected cost per flight is somewhat less than $5 million. Just this month, the Air Force signed a $20.8 million contract with the Boeing Aerospace Company for completing preliminary and detailed design and building some hardware. As the concepts stand now, the basic upper stage would include two solid motors. Two more would be added for planetary probes like the Viking craft sent to Mars.

Such an upper stage for the winged shuttle is considered vital for the shuttle's intended role as the space workhorse of the 1980's. In the engineers' view of the future, once the shuttle reaches the right spot in orbit, the great cargo-bay doors would open, and the upper stage and its payload would rise up like a military missile in its silo. The rocket and payload would be set spinning on a special table, and then released from the shuttle.

Although rapid advances in technology are opening up new high "bands" of the spectrum of radio frequencies, for such purposes as relaying television programs through communications satellites, other wave bands are growing crowded. One of these is the band between 470 and 806 megacycles a second, into which the 56 channels for ultra high frequency (U.H.F.) television are squeezed.

At a safe distance, the rocket's motor would light up to carry, for example, a 2,000-pound communications satellite like the Intelsat 5 up to the 22,300-mile altitude, where satellites appear to hover above one location along the earth's equator and can relay messages among the continents. The so-called spinning solid upper stage discussed at Huntsville is estimated to cost less than $1 million a flight compared with current estimates of $1.8 million or more for each shuttle mission. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is expected to put out a request for proposals to develop the solid-fuel rocket around Oct. 1.

In hopes of husbanding this part of the spectrum, the Office of Plans and Policy of the Federal Communications Commission has committed about $200,000 of a $500,000 annual research budget to a little-noticed development contract with Texas Instruments. The project, proposed by the company after an earlier appeal by the F.C.C. drew no responses, is designed to harness advanced integrated electronic circuit design to the problem of lessening interference among the channels. A prototype circuit is to be ready by Sept. 30, 1977.

An artist's rendering shows an interim upper stage solid-fuel system being lifted from the cargo section of an orbiting space shuttle.

called electrolysis, or reverse-osmosis type, would be used in 20-million-gallon-a-day segments of a 104-million-gallon plant. The plant is to treat salty drainage water pumped from beneath some 65,000 acres of the Wellton-Mohawk irrigation district along the Gila River.

California under a 1973 treaty revision by the United States and Mexico. Ground-breaking took place Tuesday for the 16-mile United States segment of a concrete-lined drainage canal for the concentrated salty effluent from the plant. Work on the 35-mile Mexican segment began several months ago. Negotiated contracts for the 20-million-gallon subunits of the plant are expected to be awarded next June. Oddly, for so large a project, the names of the competing companies are being kept secret under a Federal regulation. The leading contenders are the Dow Chemical Company, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Universal Oil Products' fluid systems division, and Ionics Inc.

Getting Explanations on Credit Denial

By LEONARD SLOANE

If you are denied credit by a company, you may find it easier in the future to discover the reasons.

A proposed revision to "Regulation B," recently issued by the Federal Reserve Board, would require such disclosure.

This revision would implement the 1976 amendments to the Equal Credit Opportunity Act that extended the prohibited discriminatory categories beyond sex and marital status alone. It would thereby rectify some of the shortcomings that have been pointed out by individuals and organizations since the law became effective last October.

One of the key provisions that would give the public a better understanding of their credit standing is a new definition for so-called "adverse action" taken by a creditor. It also stipulates how notification of such action must be given to the applicant and extends the length of time that records regarding credit transactions must be retained by banks, retailers and others who extend credit.

Adverse action, under the proposal, has occurred when any of three steps is taken: a creditor refuses to grant credit in an amount and on terms acceptable to the applicant; a creditor unilaterally terminates an account or makes an unfavorable change in its terms; an applicant asks for a credit limit increase and is refused.

Specific mention is made, moreover, of the circumstances under which adverse action is not deemed to have taken place. These are: the borrower accepts amounts and terms of credit different from those applied for; a creditor's action is due to inactivity, default or delinquency by the applicant; a creditor who doesn't raise a credit limit is unaware that the applicant wanted to increase it.

Whenever an adverse action is taken, however, the proposal calls for three notices to be given at the same time to the prospective borrower: a statement of the action itself, a statement of the reasons and a statement informing the applicant of his rights under the law. In a change from present practice, the board said that the statement of reasons should be used in all cases of adverse action, rather than just in instances of denial or termination of credit.

Another change provides that the statement of rights be given only to those who were affected by an adverse action, rather than to all applicants. In addition, this statement does not have to be used verbatim as printed in the proposal but can utilize substantially the same language.

Furthermore, the retention period for records related to credit that companies must keep will be lengthened under the proposal from the present 15 months to 25 months. That's because the amendments to the Act established a statute of limitations of 24 months and therefore made the longer period more in keeping with the law.

The board's proposed revision also contains a broadening of the prohibition against discrimination in extension of credit based on age. Essentially, it permits the use of age to assess creditworthiness in a statistically sound credit scoring system, but not to eliminate or reduce credit to an applicant.

This section states, though, that elderly applicants capable of receiving credit must not be assigned a lower score than applicants who get the best score for age. For example, if a creditor gives the highest value for age to those between 55 and 60 years old, a 65-year-old must get at least as good a score for age as they do. But there is no prohibition against using advancing age as a favorable, instead of an unfavorable element.

Other sections of the proposal would make it a violation to use certain information in determining creditworthiness even though not particularly prohibited by the regulation, if it has the effect of denying credit to persons protected by the law and require creditors to consider all state laws on credit discrimination inconsistent with the law until the Federal Reserve Board determines that they are consistent.

It would also make real estate creditors note "certain characteristics of applicants" to facilitate enforcement of the Act.

Although hearings on the proposal have been held and written comments have been received by the board, it has departed from its normal pattern of issuing the final revision shortly afterward. An F.R.B. spokesman said that the board intended to issue another proposed revision soon—taking into account the comments already made—to allow additional input from business, consumer groups and others.

The target date for issuance of the final revision is sometime between Thanksgiving Day and Christmas of 1976. If the deadline is met, there would be about three months to prepare for the changes in the rules, as the amendments to the Act will become effective on March 23, 1977.

Interest on the Series E Bonds is exempt, in the opinion of Hawkins, Delafield & Wood, under the existing statute and court decisions from Federal income taxes, and of all taxes imposed by the State of New York or any political subdivision thereof (including the City of New York), and the Series E Bonds are exempt from all taxation imposed thereon by or under the authority of said State and from transfer taxes except estate or gift taxes.

Prime Print works well with Prime Time...

and works well without it.

By now you probably know whether or not Prime Time is right for what you have to sell. If you're buying it, most likely it's because you want to reach as large an audience as possible. But there are some people who are hard to reach with TV. Research shows TV viewing falls off among people with higher incomes and educations. And this is precisely where Prime Print can complement Prime Time because this is where its strength is greatest.

WHERE TV DROPS OFF, PRIME PRINT PICKS UP.
By adding National Geographic to your TV schedule, you reach more of the people who watch TV less...people with more money to spend. For example, in the top income group where TV viewing is lightest, the Geographic has over 8 million readers with a median income of $27,638. If you want to be certain that you're reaching these people, Prime Print is what you need, in addition to TV.
Of course, if you only want to reach an upscale audience, Prime Print is perfect all by itself. Period.

HIGH NOTING VS. DEPTH OF SELL.
There's another factor worth considering. Your message. While Prime Time can get it a high exposure, Prime Print delivers a greater depth of sell, explanation and conviction. Add to this the believable environment of National Geographic. According to Daniel Yankelovich, our subscribers feel the Geographic is more informative, more interesting and more objective when compared to other major publications. And Yankelovich also found that reader confidence in our editorial transfers itself to the advertising that appears in our magazine.

YOU CAN STILL BUY PRIME PRINT.
Now, for the last point. And very important. Prime Print is available. You can still place your ad in National Geographic, when you want to, month after month throughout the year. What we've been saying is there are reasons for buying Prime Time and reasons for buying Prime Print. Sometimes the best media plan is a combination of both. Sometimes Prime Print can do the job better all by itself.

Old Home of Port Authority Being Filled a Bite at a Time

By ALAN S. OSER

How are things, Sylvan Lawrence, at the Port Authority's old homestead. Improving, thank you. There have been some sixable leases after setbacks from unexpected move-outs.

The Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, it may be recalled, once inhabited the remarkable industrial and office building that occupies the entire block between Eighth and Ninth Avenues and 15th and 16th Streets. When the authority skipped to the World Trade Center it sold its 111 Eighth Avenue edifice to the highest bidder, Mr. Lawrence, for about $24 million, all cash. That was in 1973.

Who knew then that Interstate Stores would file a bankruptcy petition and give up the 180,000 square feet that its shipping division occupied; that Atlantic Department Stores would start a phase-out that would cause it to drop the 240,000 square feet it occupied for distribution purposes and offices; that the Peck & Peck people would go out of business and drop 45,000 feet of distribution space?

"We kept losing tenants," said Leon Grossman, senior vice president of the Sylvan Lawrence Company. "Ninety percent we lost, they closed up the business."

Then there was the Port Authority itself. In its heyday on Eighth Avenue it occupied half the building, which has roughly four acres on each floor and a total of 2.3 million square feet of rentable space. Gradually it began to phase out.

All in all, there were a million square feet of vacant or scheduled to become so when Mr. Lawrence bought the property. Just then the breezes of recession blew up into a high wind.

No one was renting in those days. The new owner nevertheless put in 12 automatic elevators, air-conditioned and modernized lobbies, installed an internal television security system. Chase Manhattan gave a $25 million mortgage—part of it personally guaranteed by Mr. Lawrence—to cover the costs, but as time went on the owners were running a cash loss of about $200,000 a month.

"We were hoping for a single occupant to take all the industrial space," said Mr. Lawrence. "But we've gone back to the old way—a bite at a time."

Logan's third-floor space, now undergoing renovation for the company's arrival in December, is about five times larger than the typical suburban freestanding building in an industrial park. A few days ago the Sorg Printing Company, a financial and corporate printer, announced that it would take 120,000 square feet on the fourth floor. It will arrive in January from downtown locations that include 80 South Street and 163 Front Street. There have been other significant

"bites." Abbot Industries, a zipper manufacturer now at 280 36th Street, took 50,000 square feet and will arrive in December; a Japanese electrical-equipment manufacturer called Hiraoka took 30,000 square feet for its distribution operation.

An unidentified tobacco company took 55,000 square feet on the fifth floor for corporate headquarters and manufacturing and will arrive in December. It employs 200 people.

There have been other somewhat smaller leases: K.G.M. Industries, a division of a Japanese conglomerate, 17,000 square feet; Lane Bryant, 10,000 square feet for storage and distribution; Western Electric, 6,000 square feet for parts distribution; Roberts Proprietaries, 24,000 square feet for drugs and sundries distribution; Leoben Color and Chemical Company, an 80-year-old manufacturer of colors and dyes, 13,500 square feet. Leoben is currently at 103 Lafayette Street.

One recent arrival from the Garment Center was Avanti Linens, which has 28,000 square feet for manufacturing and showrooms all on one floor. The other day the chief, Arthur Tauber, was to be seen speeding from production space near Ninth Avenue to a showroom on Eighth Avenue in a motorized cart, like a pitcher coming in from the bullpen. Customers don't like to wait.

In recent months, as the business climate has improved, some sizable bites have been taken. First Jonathan Logan took 150,000 square feet on the third floor for its Etienne Aigner division, which makes leather goods. That 20-year lease kept a major textile employer from leaving the city.

Amenities dear to the heart of business were provided. There are 16 loading docks on each floor, for example, and the elevator cars for trucks are large enough for banquettes. A banquet actually was held in an elevator car at the dedication.

The new owners say they have leased 750,000 square feet of space since they took over. They have 700,000 square feet to go.

The Port Authority opened in 1932. It was designed by Cass Gilbert, who also did the George Washington Bridge. One object was to demonstrate that industry could operate efficiently in the city.

House Rejects Bill on Stockpiles WASHINGTON, Sept. 21 (Reuters)—The House of Representatives rejected a bill last night that would have authorized the Administration to sell off quantities of tin, silver, diamonds and antimony from government stockpiles. The vote was 204-180 to reject the legislation, which was sought by the Administration and narrowly approved by the armed services committee 10 days ago.

Soybeans Decline by 5c to 7c; Potatoes Rise on Foreign Interest

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

A small price rally in soybeans yesterday led to a large amount of selling on the Chicago Board of Trade, and by the end of the session contracts were 5 cents to 7 cents lower than the previous day. November beans closed at $6.43, down from $6.53 a bushel.

Several price depressing factors are behind the market's recent declining prices. The harvest is in full swing in many areas such as Minnesota and Illinois, and farmers, who generally do not have ample storage space, have been selling to make room for new supplies.

The best guess is that the carryover of beans into the new crop year, which began Sept. 1, totals about 230 million bushels, or somewhat higher than the 220 million estimated by the Government earlier this month. The next estimates of soybean stocks-on-hand will be issued by the Government after the close of trading today. Either figure is considered an adequate carryover.

Meanwhile, another depressant on grain and soybean prices came yesterday when a leading West German commodity firm estimated that the Soviet grain crop would total 220 million metric tons instead of 215 million metric tons forecast by the firm earlier. This contrasts with the Department of Agriculture's much lower estimate of 205 million metric tons for the Soviet crop. The totals include several types of grains, such as wheat, corn and oats.

A more locally based depressing price factor is the small number of barges moving soybeans and other basics down the Mississippi River from the Chicago area because of the low water level of the river. "Many of the barges are being only half loaded so that they will not go aground," an analyst explained.

Potato futures, which have been selling at low levels recently on the New York Mercantile Exchange, rose yesterday. The nearby November contract closed at 4.95 cents a pound, up from 4.89 cents, partly increased by reports of active French buying interest. Drought conditions in Europe in the past six months have led to an increasing amount of potato imports from Canada and Maine.

Ford Plans New Engine to Shrink Cylinders and Save 10% in Fuel

smoothness, was planned before it would be offered into production. Nevertheless, they excluded confidence, declaring that the company would not have gone so far out on a limb as Mr. Iacocca did today if there were serious doubt about the program's success.

Generally, the development was viewed as a potentially important advance toward meeting the Federal law enacted last December imposing difficult average fuel-economy standards for the nation's automobiles by 1985.

The idea embodied in the Ford move is not a new one.

"For 50 years," Mr. Iacocca noted, "automotive engineers have toyed with the idea of deactivating some of the engine's cylinders at precisely those times when less power is needed, and bringing the cylinders back into play again when the situation demands more power."

What has made the difference is the availability of computer technology, which makes it possible to accomplish the switching with the precision impossible with mechanical devices.

Sensors supply a so-called "electronic control module" with constant data on five conditions: engine-coolant temperature, engine speed, vacuum level in the intake manifold, transmission and throttle angle. A probe in the electronic control detects the amount of air flowing through the throttle. How do the three cylinders off? This is done by electronically opening and closing the intake valves of the three cylinders. The fuel injectors are in the center of the rocker arms over the valves in question. A there is no up and down motion the valves, they remain closed no fuel-air mixture can enter them, they do not fire in their normal fashion.

The fuel savings, engineers do not derive simply from the fuel needs of three instead of four. They also come from two factors that are especially critical in circumstances when the engine is idling.

Fewer cylinders to Cool First, there are only three cylinders to cool. So there is less fuel that would otherwise be used to cool the extra three cylinders, since three cylinders work ordinarily done by six. The isop ended wider than it would the vehicle is moving at 45 mi or more, or is decelerating. The trouble reduces the vacuum pressure on the cylinders, and so the fuel. Eliminating this negative use of fuel.

Why is Ford planning to light on light trucks, such as its Econoline vans, before other owners of conventional cars?

Henry Nickel, chief engine project, explained that a single engine fleet of trucks was initially attracted by the large fuel economy. Secondly, he said, it was uncertain when it began the project over three years affect the system might have Federal emissions standards for trucks. Mr. Nickel more lenient. It has been the case, that there is no adverse automobile emissions.

Closely cooperating with 1 innovation is the vacuum control system, which came from complementary proposals of Ford canvass of suppliers to achieve a sizable list of technical improvements.

Anta Corp. Completes Acquisition of PPE The Anta Corporation, an aluminum rod and wire, said it had completed the acquisition of the PPE of Newark, for $10 million plus assumption of stated liabilities. An agreement for the cash PPE assets was approved by directors of both companies and by PPE stockholders meeting Sept. 16. PPE produces ethylene continuous roll bags and carboys and box liners.

U.S. Increasing Duty for Sugar By 1.2c a Pound

United States sugar producers. He added that the duty increase he imposed "will offer domestic producers some protection from imports" while the trade commission's investigation is under way.

Under the escape clause of the trade law, the commission, if it finds injury to a domestic industry, can recommend import restraints of various kinds. Mr. Ford emphasized in his statement that today's action was "an interim measure," and he added that "no prejudging the eventual findings and recommendations of the commission, with respect to the question of injury or possible remedial measures."

A small amount of sugar will continue to be imported duty-free. This comes from less-developed countries that export to the United States less than $25 million worth a year and on which no duties are levied under the "general system of preferences" aimed at helping the exports of the poor countries.

The action of the Senate Finance Committee last week in inaugurating an escape clause investigation by the trade commission was an unusual step. The new trade law gave this power to the committee and its House counterpart, the Ways and Means Committee, even if the domestic industry did not request an investigation directly of the commission.

Big-league tennis courts and Little League baseball field, 3 new uncrowded schools. Brick-paved streets. A community center and convenience shopping. Even an on-island garage is available.

All overlooking the East River and Manhattan's skyline. All within a stone's throw of Manhattan's cultural, business and entertainment centers. 3 easy ways to get here. 3 ways to enjoy an easy life here. Sound too good to be true? See us for yourself. (We're close enough to hop over during lunch.) Take the tramway from 59th St. and 2nd Ave. Or catch the Q-102 bus from Queensboro Plaza. Or, if you're driving, follow the signs from 21st Ave. and 36th St. in Queens.

When you get here, you'll find beautiful apartments that take full advantage of their island setting. And give you more value for your money.

Eastwood, rental apartments for qualified families with incomes of $15,000 to $25,000. 2 bedrooms from $359, 3 bedrooms from $395. 4 bedrooms from $421. All utilities included.

All utilities included. Over 50% rented. There is room for just 2,000 families in all in this truly unique urban setting. And over 1,000 families have already decided to live here. Take your place in this scenic, spacious, secure Manhattan neighborhood. Visit us today.

MISS KRUPSAK'S EFFORT FOR MRS. ABZUG FAILS

"It's something for you to think about." Rumors about all this bubbled up yesterday and Mr. Weiss was asked about it at City Hall.

He said he had no intention of stepping aside. "I never wanted to grow up to be a judge," he said, alluding to the standard system by which candidates are lifted from the ballot to make way for others, by running for a judgeship.

But he seemed stumped by the intensity of the interest. He said that only Miss Krupsak had urged him outright to defer to Mrs. Abzug, but that he had got personal inquiries about the rumor that he might do so from Governor Carey, former Mayor Robert F. Wagner and Deputy Mayor Stanley M. Friedman.

Had he chosen to accept a judicial nomination, his committee on vacancies, headed by his friend Dudley Gaffin, presumably could have put Mrs. Abzug back on the Democratic line, insuring her a fourth term in Congress from the overwhelmingly Democratic district.

But Mr. Weiss insisted yesterday that he had no intention of giving up his chance at the seat which he had sought twice before when the district boundaries were different. Sounding somewhat shaken, he wondered aloud what would become of the reputation he had built through many years in politics.

Mr. Weiss's callers all said they had simply been asking about a rumor, not offering anything.

Mr. Wagner said: "I had spoken to Mary Anne. She was just curious. So I said, 'I'll find out.' Nobody asked me to put any pressure on."

Mr. Friedman said: "I had heard rumors. I don't go on rumors, I ask. So I talked to Teddy and he made it very clear he doesn't want to be a Supreme Court Justice."

Governor Carey's press secretary, James Vlasto, said: "The Governor and Ted Weiss chatted briefly at the Jimmy Carter rally in Penn Station—just to get information. There was no pressure of any sort."

TV Networks' Pique Over Plan for Debates

By LES BROWN

The protests by Richard S. Salant, president of CBS News, against the restrictions on television for the Presidential debates were made in a climate of frustration and defeat for the networks. Some observers believe that if that had not been the case, Mr. Salant's views might have been received more sympathetically by other journalists than they were.

Mr. Salant had seemed to be acting from peevishness, although he professed to be acting on principle. The three broadcast organizations had lost in their effort to have the equal-time law repealed, or suspended, and with that had lost the right to conduct the debates.

$2 Million in Ads to Be Lost

Instead of mounting another political series like the so-called "Great Debates" of 1960, between John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon, for which commercial broadcasting was widely praised, the networks this year will merely be carriers of the television pictures of the events.

Along with the reduction in status to virtual bystanders, the networks will be giving up premium air time for the four debates and will be surrendering approximately $2 million among them in advertising revenues.

Where there are no profits, prestige often suffices for a reward. But there will be little or no prestige for the networks with this year's debates, because the credit for them belongs to the League of Women Voters. The league took advantage of a ruling by the Federal Communications Commission and sponsored the series of confrontations between President Ford and Jimmy Carter, and between their running mates, as news events that could be covered by the networks without equal-time obligations.

Compromise of Standards Seen

Mr. Salant's remonstrance was made in the wake of these developments, and it also followed a final futile attempt by CBS corporate officers to persuade Congressional leaders that the public would be better served if the networks were allowed to arrange the debates in their own studios.

On Monday, when Mr. Salant announced that CBS would carry the telecasts of the events after all, he detailed the journalistic standards that he felt were being compromised by the ground rules for television coverage set down by the league. The limitations imposed, he said, "seriously invade our freedom to cover news."

Specifically, he objected to the participation of the candidates in selecting the journalists who would ask questions in the debates and to the prohibition against television cameras covering the invited audience and their reactions. He also deplored the denial to each network of the right to operate a camera of its own; all are required to carry a common picture provided by the pool cameras.

Intrusion Into Ethics

The restriction on unilateral camera means that individual networks cannot exercise their news judgments, Mr. Salant pointed out, adding: "We are also being asked to distort the event by ignoring that there is an audience there."

The executive noted that the league had withheld from the networks until late last week the information that the candidates would have a say in the selection of the news panel. To permit them such a role, he said, was a "disturbing intrusion into journalistic ethics."

All three networks had carried a common-pool transmission during the 1960 debates and now had unilateral cameras. There have also been instances of their permitting the White House to set the ground rules for joint interviews with the President or for other specials concerning the White House.

NBC Aide Agrees on Stand

In 1973 all three networks yielded to President Nixon's request to be interviewed by anchor-men rather than the regular White House correspondents in a pair of television interviews that Mr. Nixon granted the networks.

An NBC official, who asked not to be identified, said that while he agreed with Mr. Salant's views on the journalistic restrictions, he regretted that the CBS executive had raised issues that were extraneous to what had been the principal aim of the networks with the debates—that of achieving repeal of the equal-time law.

He said he feared that Mr. Salant had harmed that cause, because his behavior seemed to say, "If you won't let us do the debates our way, we won't do them at all."

of Blacks and Puerto Ricans is Heavy in Primary Balloting

By FRANK LYNN

In bitter primary contests in the Bronx and in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, Black and Puerto Rican voters, often criticized for being turned out in greater numbers than white voters, were disproportionately in last week's Democratic primary in the four suburban counties and in selected upstate counties.

Size of the Turnout

The following table, based on the April 1976 enrollment figures (the latest available), shows the turnout in last week's Democratic primary in the city, in the four suburban counties and in selected upstate counties.

Table with 3 columns: Enrollment, Vote, and Pct. Rows include New York City (Bronx, Kings, Queens, Richmond), Suburbs (Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester, Rockland), and Upstate (Albany, Broome, Erie, Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Oondaga).

out in the areas of minority. Part of a general pattern in New York City and its suburbs, percentages of voter turnout in the four suburban counties and in selected upstate counties.

in the general election, the 4 suburban counties have a 4 larger turnout than New York City. In the 60 and 70 percent turnout 1974 Senate election, the 40 and 50 percent turnout in New York City.

is just not excited about voting in the primary, said Margaret Rice, Mayor of Rochester and 1 of the campaign in the state Carter, the Democratic presidential.

Local Contests Cited

City's Democratic chairman, Joseph, who headed Daniel P. campaign for the Senate in the Democratic primary, said that primary voters had been at the primary polls by local Congressional and legislative as well as the statewide contest as the five-way struggle for nomination.

that upstate Democrats, as party in their area, had fewer local offices, since the nominees are not tantamount to election in New York City.

the reason, the turnout last week was low north of the Westchester line.

of from a low of 9.1 percent in Dutchess County, adjacent to the Catskills, to a high of 27.6 in Rensselaer County, near Albany. The high figure responded with the low figure in New York City and suburban counties for Suffolk and Richmond.

also low in the three-way senatorial primary in the three-way senatorial primary won by Ramsey Clark two years ago, there was no clear-cut upstate-downstate pattern in the turnout, possibly because there was an upstate candidate in the Senate primary, Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse.

Of the candidates in last week's primary, only Mr. Moynihan had upstate ties, a second home in Delaware County. However, he has not been identified with upstate politics.

Last week's turnout was higher statewide largely because of larger numbers of voters in New York City and the suburban counties. In most of the upstate counties, last week's turnout was lower than the 1974 turnout.

Roman Catholic areas such as the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn, the northeast Bronx, Maspeth, Queens, and Staten Island.

Many, but not all, of the median and high-turnout districts had local primary contests. In the black and Puerto Rican areas of the South Bronx and Bedford-Stuyvesant, where the vote is often low, voters were attracted to the polls last week by stiff challenges of two minority people members of the House of Representatives, Shirley Chisholm and Herman Badillo.

One Had 7-Way Contest

The effect of a local primary was evident in the 22d Assembly District in the Rockaways, which had the highest turnout in the city—51.3 percent—and also had a seven-way contest for the Democratic Assembly nomination. The next highest was the 65th no the middle East Side—50.1 percent—where there was a two-way Assembly primary and a hotly contested Civil Court primary.

In the three-way senatorial primary won by Ramsey Clark two years ago, there was no clear-cut upstate-downstate pattern in the turnout, possibly because there was an upstate candidate in the Senate primary, Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse.

Of the candidates in last week's primary, only Mr. Moynihan had upstate ties, a second home in Delaware County. However, he has not been identified with upstate politics.

Last week's turnout was higher statewide largely because of larger numbers of voters in New York City and the suburban counties. In most of the upstate counties, last week's turnout was lower than the 1974 turnout.

TV: Men-Boys, Inanity and Blood

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

At this point, it's still too early to evaluate with absolute certainty the collection of new series slated for Wednesday evenings. CBS's "Alice" doesn't begin until next week. ABC's "Charlie's Angels" arrived too late for a prescreening yesterday, whatever that may signify. But based on the available evidence—CBS's "Ball Four," the NBC "Movie of the Week" in tonight's case, "The Million Dollar Rip-Off" with Freddie Prinze, and NBC's "The Quest"—there is every indication that Wednesday could turn out to be the most miserable night of the week for new entries.

"Ball Four" is based on the book by Jim Bouton, the former New York Yankees pitcher, who, several years ago, decided to provide the public with candid, behind-the-scenes glimpses of America's national pastime. His portraits of carousing jocks were not especially appreciated by the baseball establishment. Mr. Bouton went on to become a local television sportscaster in New York.

In the series, Mr. Bouton plays Jim Bouton, a pitcher for the "Washington Americans." His teammates notice Bouton talking nuts, and discover that he is writing a series for Sports Illustrated magazine. His manager, the club owners and the baseball commissioner balk at the idea. The rest is largely limited to locker-room clowning among the players.

It doesn't work. In fact, "Ball Four" is one of those projects that seem to be canceled before they begin. Tonight's episode was completed only a weekend ago, after part of the original staff walked off the show, and veteran "professionals" were called in for major surgery. Jay Sandrich, the director, inserted some looney visual routines, but the patient succumbs anyway.

What's left is a collection of bare-chested athletic types playing desperately for laughs. With only a towel around his middle, Bouton opens the program, saying, "You won't believe this, but last night, in the back of the bus, our shortstop kissed our first baseman." Men-boys will be men-boys.

Mr. Bouton, a disarmingly amiable fellow, seems genuinely amused throughout. The show's theme song pinpoints the dominant Bouton quality, "There's a little boy in me who likes being free." The little boy, though, has been trapped in silly childishness. On top of that, he's a dreadful actor.

If "Ball Four" is exasperating, "Million Dollar Rip-Off" is downright insulting. Freddie Prinze, comedian of Puerto Rican and Hungarian family roots and co-star of "Chico and the Man," plays Muff Novak, a genius about electronics who is plotting a payroll robbery of the Chicago transit system with a gang of four voluptuous women.

Rarely, in the generally shabby annals of made-for-television movies, has a tackler production been allowed public exposure. The script, the direction and the performances are uniformly scruffy. As Mr. Prinze and his women sit around their dumpy apartment, with a bouncy and completely unconnected music track overlaying the dialogue, the scene keeps suggesting nothing more than the self-conscious atmosphere of two-bit porno flicks. This member of the audience tuned out about half way through.

With "The Quest," which begins this evening at 9:30 in a special 90-minute production, NBC appears to be exploring further possibilities for expansion on the violence frontier. The pilot for this series, written by Tracy Keenan Wynn, offered a depiction of the American West before the turn of the century and the treatment was notable for its realistic detail and inclusion of fresh material. The series is maintaining the realistic detail, but applying it to familiar old plots.

Kurt Russell and Tim Matheson are back as the young Bandiere brothers, searching for their sister who, years earlier, disappeared during an Indian raid. This evening, they hear of a young white woman living with some Cheyenne in the area of Fort George. The woman is not their sister, but she sparks all the impeccable motivations for bloodshed and assorted atrocities.

The Indian village is decimated by soldiers. Dead bodies cover the camera foreground. The Army captain shoots one of his own men in a "mercy killing." The Army's wounded volunteer for suicide duty. The woman's half-breed son is assaulted by other kids. She is brutally raped by an Army man, whose neck is broken when he is thrown through a window. And she, under the influence of the town pimp, goes to work in the local brothel. A happy ending is tacked on almost as an afterthought.

For the moment, the most charitable comment on this cynical exercise in exploitation is that, at least, NBC didn't try to slip "The Quest" into the family hour.

Modern Views Alter Mormon Haven

and followed. Now the Mormon flock, particularly the young, are subject to more worldly ministrations.

First, there has apparently been a decline of devout Mormons, the church-going kind who accept without question the church's standards of behavior, which are quite rigid in its taboos against sex, alcoholic beverages, tobacco, coffee, tea and other worldly pleasures.

Church officials insist that membership is higher than ever in the state, but almost anyone else familiar with existing social patterns here will argue that the church continues to count men and women who long ago ceased active participation or allegiance to church leadership.

Consequently, the church states that 71 percent of the population of the Salt Lake Valley are Mormons, while others say that nearly half that figure are "Jack Mormons," who have fallen away from the church but have not been officially purged from membership roles.

These dropout Mormons occupy positions of influence and respect throughout the community, though in ward parishes they might be viewed by the true believers as apostates and therefore subject to perdition.

The pressure to keep up appearances is considerable, however, so there are church-going Mormons who are secret.

Church opposition kept Utah a dry state until a liquor-by-the-drink referendum in 1963—which was decisively defeated—opened the way for more liberal drinking laws the following year, allowing the sale of mini-bottles in shops adjacent to hotels and restaurants for the first time. This led to a beheading of the rules that established "clubs" that could sell mini-bottles over the counter to "members" or keep a full bottle of liquor behind the bar exclusively for their use.

At Soowbird Ski Resort, 30 minutes from downtown Salt Lake City, lodge guests who register at the resort are automatically members of clubs where mini-bottles are sold over the counter. This change in the law, as well as the building of the Salt Palace convention and sports center in downtown Salt Lake City, has revitalized the city and provided an anchor to a proliferation of motor hotels, restaurants, "private" cocktail lounges and hangouts where none had previously existed.

"It used to be that Salt Lake was the looniest night of the year for a traveling man," said Shelton Young, a manufacturer's representative from Chicago. "Now you can take in a professional hockey game, see a show, or unwind with a drink somewhere without carrying a pint around in your suitcase."

Church Role to Business

Growth and economic prosperity directly benefit the church because it has large holdings in local real estate and mercantile interests, in addition to increased ties to the church by prosperous members.

"Money talks to the church," said one local non-Mormon tied to the ski industry who expressed concern that a new state liquor commission might take steps to limit sales and memberships at clubs. "Show the church leadership that their downtown holdings would be hurt by a liquor crackdown and they'll call the dogs off the said."

"This city is a lot more sophisticated now because of an influx of people from outside the state, but it still has a great homespun environment," said Gil Athay, a 36-year-old criminal defense lawyer who last week won the Democratic nomination for State Attorney General.

Mr. Athay expects that the church will oppose his candidacy in the general election through unofficial channels, since the church officially takes political stands only on issues, not on individuals. But Mr. Athay, a self-confessed "Jack Mormon," opposes capital punishment, is against a constitutional amendment on abortion, favors the equal rights amendment, supports regulation of small guns and does not believe that pornography is the paramount social evil facing Utah today—positions conflicting with Mormon sentiments on almost every point.

Start a year and end a year with the world's biggest People.

On December 20, the biggest People anybody ever saw will appear.

It's the year-end Double Issue of People magazine, on sale that day at newsstands and supermarkets.

Sure, the Double People is an annual event by now. But this year's Double is going to be even more joyful, more surprising and more downright fascinating than ever.

It's the happiest holiday magazine of them all—a year-beginning special and a year-end special all rolled into one. For two long weeks it's going to be out there selling to millions of America's best customers—just when they're in the mood to look ahead. Just when they're making plans.

They're beautiful people.

After just two and a half years, our rate base has already climbed to 1,800,000. That means an audience of 10,500,000* very special adult readers.

They're beautiful customers...young, educated, prospering, urban. They're the out-front men and women who are first to pick up on new ideas, new fashions, new products.

Advertisers certainly buy the idea. More and more, they're joining the parade to People. Appliances, food, cosmetics, clothes, cars, liquor, travel, tobacco; toiletries, credit cards...you name it, you'll see it in People.

Start '77 with a celebration.

Whatever you advertise, the Double People is a rare opportunity...one that comes but once a year. So start your 1977 campaign with a celebration. End 1976 with a bang. At one and the same time.

Again, People's editors will name the 25 most intriguing people of the year. How many of the cover subjects above will make it? Wait and see.

We'll look at the losers of 1976. We'll predict the winners of 1977. Who's going to leap to prominence in movies, sports, politics, books, the arts and just plain life? We'll be very surprised at our crystal balling. And so will be People's millions.

Plan now to take advantage of the Double People's longer life and extra excitement...all at our most efficient page rate. Color closing is November 8; black and white, December 6.

Suddenly, the place to be during the holidays is People's Double People.
